Browning, Elizabeth Barrett, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1809–1861, b. at Burn Hall, Durham (not in London, as stated in vol. i.) Her name was originally Elizabeth Barrett Moulton, but her father, on succeeding to some property, changed his name to Barrett. Her early life was passed at Hope End, near Ledbury, Herefordshire, and at Sidmouth and London. After her marriage to Robert Browning, infra, she resided with her husband at Florence, where the house called "Casa Guidi" now bears a commemorative inscription placed upon it by a vote of the municipality. Most of Mrs. Browning's works, and several collective editions of her poems, are mentioned ante, vol. i. Add: 1. Poems before Congress, Lon., 1860, 12mo. 2. Last Poems, 1862, 12mo. Posth. Edited by R. Browning. (This includes some translations written in early life.) 3. The Greek Christian Poets and the English Poets, 1863, 12mo. Edited by R. Browning. American edition, with Preface and Memoir by Richard Henry Stoddard, N. York, 1877, 2 vols. 18mo.

"Interesting, of course, in virtue of their authorship. They relate, however, in great measure, to matters of current literature and criticism not very familiar to the generation which has grown up since their date. . . . They contain, in fact, the record of a literary partnership now for the first time fully disclosed, and in some respects probably unique. . . . Sundry detached felicities occur in passages. . . . At the end Mr. Horne throws in some detached literary recollections of his own."—Sat. Rev., xliii. 25.

Browning, Robert, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1812–1889. After his wife's death Mr. Browning resided mainly in London, spending, however, a part of each year on the Continent,—in later years chiefly at Venice, where he died at the Palazzo Rezzonico, Dec. 12. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. In 1881 the Browning Society was formed in London to promote the study of the poet's works, and many similar societies have since been formed in England and the United States. The following list of his works includes those mentioned ante, vol. i., where, among other defects, very few dates are appended. Far more minute information concerning separate poems and volumes will be found in Mr. Furnivall's Bibliography of Browning. 1. Pauline: a Fragment of a Confession, Lon., 1833, p. 8vo. (This was not reprinted until 1868, when, hearing that it was about to be republished in America, the author inserted it in vol. i. of his Poetical Works.) 2. Paracelsus, Lon., 1835, p. 8vo. 3. Strafford: an Historical Tragedy, Lon., 1837, 8vo. (Acted at the Covent Garden Theatre, April 23, 1837.) An edition with Notes by E. H. Hickey, secretary to the Browning Society, and an Introduction by Samuel Rawson Gardiner, was published in 1884, cr. 8vo. 4. Sordello, Lon., 1840, p. 8vo. 5. "The length of the poem is far too great; the form of it is clumsy; the repetitions numerous. Here and there is a passage full of Mr. Browning's old contortions and obscurities, which have rendered 'Paracelsus' and so many of his lyrics sealed books to the multitude. But, all deductions being made, he has in the present volumes given to the world a poem that must be considered one of the most considerable of the nineteenth century."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 460.

15. Balaustion's Adventure: including a Transcript from Euripides, Lon., 1871, 12mo; 3d ed., 1881.

"From Mr. Browning's poem, including his transcript from the 'Alcestis' of Euripides, the capable English student may learn more of the form and spirit of Greek tragedy than is known to some prosaic Greek scholars."—Sat. Rev., xxxii. 310.

16. Prince Hohenstiel-Schwangau, Saviour of Society, Lon., 1871, 12mo.

"The title of Saviour of Society is almost as definitely personal as a proper name, and . . . the French Empire might have been substituted for the imaginary principality. . . . The Emperor Napoleon indeed would, even if he had been introduced in his own name, have had little reason to complain of an apologist who sometimes defends his conduct and motives with a subtle ingenuity of which he might perhaps himself be scarcely capable. Notwithstanding the ironical appearance of the title-page, his services in saving society are acknowledged in perfect seriousness. . . . The picturesque and impressive passages which are thickly interspersed through the poem would sufficiently atone for defects which it might be possible to point out both in the plan and the composition. . . . The intellectual effort which is required to grapple with Mr. Browning's marvellous involutions of thought is in itself no inconsiderable pleasure, for experience shows that the windings of the labyrinth are regulated by a law, and that in the inmost recesses a treasure is concealed."—Sat. Rev., xxxiii. 118.

17. Fifine at the Fair, Lon., 1872, 12mo.

"The whole of Mr. Browning's poem is . . . an illustration of his text that the life of man is a life of error lived by the help of truth, a life of falsehood which implies the need and capacity for reality, a life of illusion grounded and fulfilled in some ultimate perception of true being, a life of endless yearning after that which always eludes and yet always inspires us,—in short, a life such as that attributed to the nymph-goddess by Æschylus when he called her 'divine or mortal, or a mingling of both.' This is the theme which Mr. Browning pursues through many a page of his eccentric, caustic, abrupt, business-like passion, into something like a philosophy of love, of beauty, of art, and even of faith."—Spectator, xlv. 853.

"It would need a bold man, indeed, to read the book through once steadily from cover to cover, close it, and declare himself possessed of the key to the riddle. His second reading will soon disabuse him. His third and fourth—each of which will be labour well paid—will make him wonder, with ourselves, whether Mr. Browning has not, in Samsonic wantonness of strength, set the world a riddle to be solved by those alone who plough with his heifer."—Ath., No. 2328.

"'Fifine' is the most enigmatic of all Mr. Browning's works, with the exception of 'Sordello.' . . . Yet in spite of all the drawbacks to enjoyment which are wilfully interposed, the subtle and profound genius of Mr. Browning encourages and partially rewards apparently hopeless toil. It is his pleasure to follow in the plan of his poem the casual associations of a kind of meditative day-dream, until, passing into an actual dream as it is conventionally represented in poetry, he composes one of those symbolic allegories which are unknown to the sleep of real life. . . . Whether Mr. Browning is æsthetically justified in framing elaborate riddles which drive ordinary readers to despair in language which occasionally rises into poetry, and sometimes descends into a jargon little better than slang, is a question of literary morality which is not to be hastily solved. . . . Undoubtedly the puzzled and angry critic, striving with the intricate perplexities of 'Fifine,' involuntarily finds himself liking what he approached with a feeling akin to hate; and, as he inevitably begins with baffling ignorance, it may be hoped that he sometimes emerges into a glimmering of knowledge. From the first he finds that the discords which jar upon his ear and his judgment have a relation to art, and that the connection of desultory passages is to be traced, if at all, by an imaginative clue. The stimulus to thought is in itself valuable, as a difficult or inaccessible Alpine summit furnishes an attraction to mountain climbers. The great majority of readers, who may think the discovery of the meaning of 'Fifine' not worth the labour, may nevertheless find gratification in the Prologue and Epilogue, both of which probably bear some kind of relation to the main poem. The Epilogue, which also bears the title of 'The Householder,' is, with the exception of the last scene in the Second Part of 'Faust,' an almost solitary attempt to apply a humorous treatment to Death; yet nothing can be more earnest than the figurative expression of impatience to have done with life. The assumption that personal recognition after death is not a doctrine to be asserted, but a familiar matter of course, gives to the little poem a reality worthy of Dante."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 220.

18. A Selection from the Works of Robert Browning: with a Memoir of the Author and Explanatory Notes: for the Use of Schools and Private Tuition. Edited by F. H. Ahn, Ph.D. Leipsic, 1872. 19. Selections from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning, Lon., 1872, 8vo. (Chiefly the same poems as in the selections published in 1865.) 20. Red Cotton Nightcap Country: or, Turf and Towers, Lon., 1873, 12mo. (This is founded on incidents brought to light in a lawsuit at Saint-Aubyn, in Normandy. The real names of the persons concerned were originally given in the poem, but by the advice of Sir John (now Lord) Coleridge fictitious names were substituted before publication.) 21. Aristophanes' Apology, including a Transcript from Euripides: being the Last Adventure of Balaustion, Lon., 1875, 12mo. 22. The Inn Album: a Poem in Blank Verse, Lon., 1875, 12mo. (This is founded on incidents in the life of Lord de Ros, whose career of dissipation had made him notorious.)

"Mr. Browning . . . has never chosen a more dramatic, or, it may be added, a more terrible subject than he has done in the 'Inn Album.' In this he has displayed, more than anywhere else, the essentially dramatic power of concentration which he possesses in a marked degree. The force of his new poem, which is appalling in the swift convergence of three histories of tragic passion, is little marred by any wandering into the realms of the speculative reflection that takes a reader's attention away from the characters put before him."—Sat. Rev., xl. 716.

"The raw material of a 'penny dreadful,' such as the theme here is, requires more artistic manipulation than Mr. Browning has given it before it can be called a poem. Beauty of any kind is what he has carefully excluded. Vulgarity, therefore, is stamped upon the 'Inn Album,' in spite of the ingenuity with which, by suppressing name and place and superfluous circumstance, the writer succeeds in presenting only the spiritual action and reaction of his characters upon each other, in spite of the marvellous scalpel-exercise of analysis which bares the most recondite motives, in spite of the intellectual brilliancy which gives a value to everything he has to say."—J. A. Symonds: Acad., viii. 543.

23. Pacchiarotto, and How he Worked in Distemper: with other Poems, Lon., 1876, 12mo.

"In the present volume he challenges all who presume to form and express an independent judgment of his poems in language so unprovoked, so unreasonable, and so coarse that it would be almost an act of cowardice not to answer his defiance. . . . It is a whimsical fancy of a genuine poet to write verses in the hope of frightening and insulting readers into admiration and reverence."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 205.

"His later works have been injured, this last of all, utterly spoiled, by the strong fit of intellectual disgust under which he labours."—Spectator, xlix. 1070.

24. The Agamemnon of Æschylus, Lon., 1877, 12mo.

"We expected great things from this translation, and we have been bitterly disappointed. . . . He has trampled upon his mother-tongue as with the hoofs of a buffalo, and played such fantastic tricks with its syntax, prosody, and idiom that it requires all the nobler poems with which he has enriched and adorned the English language 'to weigh against the deep treason of these unparalleled offences.'"—Spectator, l. 1402.

"It does not convey to the English reader either the pleasure of a poem in his own tongue or the impression which the original makes on a scholar's mind. . . . The more we examine the workmanship of Mr. Browning's version, comparing English and Greek phrases in detail, the more reason shall we have to wonder at his dexterity in matching word with word, and maintaining the exact order of the original."—J. A. Symonds: Acad., xii. 419.

25. La Saisiaz; and the Two Poets of Croisic, Lon., 1878, 12mo.

"The two poems which make up the present volume apparently owe their origin to Mr. Browning's residence at one time on the coast of Brittany, and at another time in a remote village on the Savoy side of the Lake of Geneva. . . . The reader . . . is destined to endure the history of two deservedly forgotten poets whose existence Mr. Browning has unhappily re-discovered, because they lived respectively at Croisic in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. . . . The poem contains nearly fourteen hundred lines, of which not one is calculated to dwell in human memory. . . . The poem which takes its name from the hamlet of La Saisiaz is founded on personal experience of the sudden death of a near friend. . . . From a touching expression of feelings natural on the occasion, Mr. Browning passes into a long and subtle course of reasoning on the probability of a future life. As in many other poems, he rather indicates than expresses thoughts which have probably in his own mind both a logical and an imaginative sequence. . . . No poet would excel Mr. Browning in the faculty of reasoning in verse if he could but condescend to be lucid."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 759.

26. Dramatic Idyls, 1879, p. 8vo.

"The style is less obscure than that of some of Mr. Browning's poems, and his characteristic vigour survives, though it is almost wholly exhibited in a grotesque form, and for the purpose, or at least with the effect, of giving useless pain."—Sat. Rev, xlvii. 774.

"This is by far the best book which Mr. Browning has published for many years. Though not reaching the level of his 'Men and Women,' or of the first portions of 'The Ring and the Book,' it has many passages full of his characteristic power, and, except where a rough style gives dramatic force to the sketch, . . . nothing at all of the truculent ugliness, the ostentatious broken-windedness, of his latest gasping style of English verse. Of course, his subjects are, as usual with Mr. Browning, startling subjects. He not only loves to flash his weird figures upon the imagination with all the suddenness and abruptness of a magic lanthorn, but to present you with a subject that takes your breath away as much by the singularity of its attitude as by the suddenness of its appearance. He rejects purposely the shading and the moral atmosphere which make the grimmest subjects seem natural when they are given in connection with all the conditions of their history and origin, for his object is to make you see the wonder of the world, rather than its harmony, or the context which, partly at least, explains it. But assuming . . . the poet's special bent and genius, there is nothing specially harsh in this volume, and much that is really powerful, while the harshest pictures in it are lent a touch of grandeur by the purpose which penetrates the life portrayed."—Spectator, lii. 692.

27. Dramatic Idyls: Second Series, 1880, 12mo.

"In the present volume Mr. Browning has tested less severely than usual the inexhaustible loyalty of his genuine admirers. . . . The second series of 'Dramatic Idyls' exhibits one of his peculiar gifts in his discernment of the poetic use which may be made of popular stories."—Sat. Rev., l. 237.

28. Selections from the Poetical Works of Robert

Browning: Second Series, 1880. 29. Jocoseria, Lon., 1883, 12mo; 2d ed. same year.

"Though 'Jocoseria' is not so rich nor so full as Mr. Browning's last volume, an extract will show how far it is from indicating any decline in his dazzling and unique powers. There is the same alertness, the same exuberance of vitality, the same unrivalled intellectual subtlety, the same brilliant wit and searching humour, with which he has been familiarizing us for many years."—Ath., No. 2891.

30. Ferishtah's Fancies, Lon., 1884, 12mo.

"The key of Ferishtah's philosophy is contained in the text of his discourse; and some of the parables illustrate even to the average intellect the moral which they are intended to convey. . . . In all of them the transitions, the inferences, and the whole treatment of the subject-matter are essentially poetical."—Sat. Rev., lviii. 727.

"In 'Ferishtah's Fancies' we have, as we suppose, a familiar sketch of Mr. Browning's theology, with its bearing on the morality of our actual life."—Spectator, lvii. 1614.

"The Browning Society has new reasons for gratitude to its patron saint or eponymic hero. Four or five thousand lines, pregnant with subtle meaning, will occupy the attention of the Society for many months. . . . Many passages might be quoted which would prove Mr. Browning to be a poet of a high order, if his reputation were still to make."—Sat. Rev., lxiii. 302.

GENERAL CRITICISM:—

"No poet since Burns—none, perhaps, since Shakespeare—has known and felt so deeply as Mr. Browning the pathos of human life."—Ath., No. 2639.

"If Mr. Arnold is the poet of our times who as poet could least resist la maladie du siècle in its subtler forms, he whose energy of heart and soul most absolutely rejects and repels its influence is Mr. Browning. To him the world appears to be a palæstra in which we are trained and tested for other lives to come; it is a gymnasium for athletes. Action, passion, knowledge, beauty, science, art,—these are names of some of the means and instruments of our training and education. The vice of vices, according to his ethical creed, is languor of heart, lethargy or faintness of spirit, with the dimness of vision and feebleness of hand attending such moral enervation. Which of us does not suffer now and again from a touch of spiritual paralysis? Mr. Browning's poetry, to describe it in a word, is a galvanic battery for the use of spiritual paralytics. At first the shock and the tingling frightened patients away; now they crowd to the physician and celebrate the cure. Which of us does not need at times that virtue should pass into him from a stronger human soul? To touch the singing robes of the author of 'Rabbi Ben Ezra,' and 'Prospice,' and 'The Grammarian's Funeral,' is to feel an influx of new strength."—E. DOWDEN: Victorian Literature, (Transcripts and Studies, p. 210.)

"The essential thing about him, what differences him from other poets, seems to be that he is primarily a psychologist, with certain favorite and obtrusive theories as regards religion, life, and love, and with a subtle and intricate mode of expressing himself—we do not speak of the strained prosaicalness, the labored conversationalism, of his surface style—which is perfectly in consonance with the depth of his insight into the intricacies and subtleties of human character which he so naturally and so much loves to study and depict."—Nation, viii. 135.

"Browning . . . is by nature and sympathy a realist. He has a strong hold on fact, a resolute aversion from fancies and illusions, however arising, from whatever part of man's nature they spring, by whatever interests encouraged; keen and hardy thought and care for reality are constant elements of his work. His energetic curiosity has in it something of Bacon; his vigorous research and intellectual exploration something of Aristotle. Science, in its large and thorough sense, though no 'pursuit' of his, is in complete sympathy with the habit and operation of his mind. But with this quality and these powers he is also a thinker, and, above all, a poet. He is, therefore, not mastered by his practical bent nor by the world of facts, and he is certainly not absorbed or over-impressed by recent aspects of knowledge, or by the result of modern science. He knows how 'mere facts' neither exhaust the world nor satisfy the mind. He knows the 'infinite significances' that facts have for thought, and this significance comes of the mind's own laws and depths. He is, in a word, an idealist in the last resort. Behind the energetic realism and strong grip on facts is a 'visionary power' and sense of ideas,—convictions and passions that claim and affirm a world more real because ideal. Every fact—and the body of experience is seen upon this ground—is illumined and transfigured by this principle. He has the poet's 'ulterior, intellectual perceptions,' the artist's sense of the reality of the ideal, the thinker's conviction of its spirituality. Aware of both sides of experience, and keenly aware of its real side, he yet seeks on its ideal side the clue to experience and to the unknowable element of man's own nature. Of all worlds to him the most real is the world of man's thought and passion; and the world of man's mind and spirit has far greater interest for him than any world of things and forces. The beliefs and emotions, the characters and actions, of men, the expression of man through religion and art, the revelation of man in literature and history,—here indeed is a realm of facts of most curious and profound interest, facts requiring and rewarding interpretation more than any other facts, and throwing more light than the whole body of physical knowledge on all that is of most value for us to know. With the strongly positive quality of nature that has been described, Browning has bent his mind upon these facts above all others, and in his study and command of them gives assurance both of solidity and depth. In an age of science mainly physical, he has maintained and illustrated the supreme interest and most real significance of man, not only to himself and with reference to every 'use' of life, but with reference to knowledge too. To this ground he has kept; from this stand-point and with this outlook all his work has been made."—JAMES FOTHERINGHAM: Studies in the Poetry of Robert Browning, 2d ed., pp. 18–20.

"Browning's poetry is peculiarly needed by the present generation. It is a counter-irritant to that poison of subjectivity which impels poets to shut themselves up in the maze of their own personal experiences, and to humanize Nature because they cannot dramatize Man. When, day by day, originality grows more rare, when eccentricity masquerades as independence, when men's minds are more and more cast in uniform moulds, and when forty poets write like one, it is something that Browning reversed the conventional value of expression above substance, refused to turn the handle of a music box, disdained the shower of similes which displayed the ingenious fancy of the pyrotechnic artist. His very ruggedness is a protest against that creamy smoothness which emasculates religion, enervates literature, and robs character of its virility. . . . Browning's characteristic theme is the scope and meaning of the human soul, the interior life, and its laws. Spiritual dynamics are his passion. He explores the shadowy region in which ideas, feelings, motives, are generated by elusive, impalpable elements. He notes everything which moves or reveals the soul, in order that he may disclose its mental machinery. He is the Columbus of a new continent, and both the voyage and the country itself are strange to us. His aim is to seize the unacted, unspoken impulses of a character, for he is convinced that speech or conduct imperfectly expresses real motives. Action does not translate thought truthfully or idiomatically. In the working of the mind upon itself, in the rise and growth of particular moods, in the inward conflict of feeling, is laid bare the soul's conception of itself. So it is that Browning prizes particular crises and particular characters. On the one hand, he values those moments of intense passion which make their own laws, those sudden crises which lift men off their feet or catch them off their guard, those strange conjunctures which break down barriers, stifle prudence, and sweep away conventionality. Such lightning-flashes light up the very essence of human nature, and reveal the soul to itself. On the other hand, he is, on similar grounds, attracted to strong passionate characters, who alone are capable of the requisite intensity and energy of feeling. It is not the laws of life which he esteems, but the exceptions. . . . Even in the introspective drama, which is his own chosen field, he is not in one sense dramatic. He does not merge himself in his characters, but always speaks with his vizor raised. His thought is vividly embodied in real men and women; but the embodiment is often permeated with his own strong personality. He enters into the hearts and minds of his creations, lodges himself there, scrutinizes their experiences, analyzes their motives, and presents them and their case in the light of his own mental habits. On the other hand, no dramatist except Shakespeare has created so vast a variety of human characters, each distinctively individualized, each surrounded by circumstances of his own appropriate world, set in a frame which is drawn with infinite detail and unfailing sympathy. His abstractions are always translated into terms of real life, and his thought is always presented in living characters. Browning himself is repeated; but the vitality of no one creation is impaired; each figure is complete and distinct in itself. The poet is present indeed, but he gives us no models twisted into a fitting pose, through whose mouth he utters his own opinions or appropriate meditations. Here is no simulation of life more ghastly than original death, no play of limb and feature reflected from the individuality of the artist. On the contrary, Browning has produced a varied range of characters, drawn from every scale of humanity, every age and every clime, men and women throbbing with life and passion, intense in the expression of emotions which they intensely feel. It is true that he relies upon the quick apprehensions of his readers, that he requires them to meet him half-way with their energies fully awake, and that his character pieces are presented without aid from actors, stage direction, or action. His scenery is laid in the chambers of thought; his persons are feelings, his situations transitions of emotion, his crises moments in the growth of moods, his catastrophes the moods themselves. The mental vicissitudes which he traces are embodied and individualized, not by the actions which interpret formed characters, but by the impulses which reveal characters in process of formation. But, in spite of these difficulties, he has reanimated dead minds and given them voice to proclaim their inmost secrets, because he has fused his live soul with the inert mass by the sympathetic action of a vivid imagination. And in so doing he has created a new form of dramatic literature, and taken

"'for a nobler stage the soul itself,
Its shifting fancies and celestial lights,
With all its grand orchestral silences,
To keep the pauses of the rhythmic sounds.'"

Manitoba: its Infancy, Growth, and Present Condition. Maps and Illust. Lon., 1882, cr. 8vo.

"A ten years' residence in Manitoba enables Prof. Bryce to write with authority. Yet his personal experiences constitute a small portion only of his volume, the greater part being devoted to a narrative of what Lord Selkirk did for what is now Canada's 'Prairie Province.'"—Ath., No. 2851.

2. A Short History of the Canadian People, Lon., 1887, p. 8vo.

"No one who has read Dr. Bryce's 'Manitoba' could doubt that in chronicling the events of his native country he would bring to this duty an industry, an accuracy, and a conscientious desire to be impartial, which, after all, are to the historian and to the student of history qualities of infinitely greater importance than mere literary power and a trick of marshalling his facts—or assumptions—in a dramatic form. A critical examination of the Short History amply confirms this belief."—Acad., xxxi. 303.

Bryce, James, D.C.L., son of James Bryce, of Boweshill, Blantyre, Glasgow, b. 1838, at Belfast; educated at the University of Glasgow, and at Trinity College, Oxford, graduating in 1862, with a double first class. He was elected Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1862; was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1867, and practised as a barrister for some years. In 1870 he was appointed Regius professor of civil law at Oxford. "It is singularly free from bias, prejudice, and party spirit; its statements are accurate, and the tangled web of the land difficulty is unravelled with considerable success. . . . Yet as the result of the joint labour of seven gifted and well-informed men, it is before all things disappointing."—Ath., No. 3189.

8. The American Commonwealth, Lon., 1888, 3 vols. 8vo. Part I., The National Government. Part II., The State Governments. Part III., The Party System. Part IV., Public Opinion. Part V., Illustrations and Reflections. Part VI., Social Institutions.

"It is an admirable book in many ways, full of the nutriment of fact, and of just observations often eloquently and always lucidly put; but it is too big. . . . The subject is vast, the knowledge of the author is immense, in every page those who wish to know America obtain fresh nutriment for their thoughts. . . . The exhaustiveness of the book; its wealth of knowledge; its conspicuous and sometimes almost harassing impartiality, are marvels; but still, in this generation, and among the flood of interests which press on every man competent to study such a work, time has to be considered. With that reserve, however, we have nothing but praise for 'The American Commonwealth.' We have not found a point of interest which is not thoroughly discussed, or an opinion which is not supported by full illustrations, or a judgment which is visibly tinctured in the slightest degree either by prejudice or rancour."—Spectator, lxi. 1814.

"He is apparently very conscious of the vast importance of America, and, though he does not argue for a side, is a firm believer in the virtues of democracy. Yet he has to write a long book to tell us such truths about it as these,—that, after a century of effort under the most favourable circumstances, it has achieved a government in which mediocrity is preferred, in which personal interests are of immense importance, in which the general vulgarity and rudeness of the scramble shut out men who possess ability and some regard for their dignity."—Sat. Rev., lxvi. 745.

"It may be safely assumed that all candid Americans will recognize it as a truthful and trustworthy picture of our institutions and our people. The prevailing sentiment in regard to it in this country will be wonder at its powerful, clear, and sympathetic appreciation of all that is strong and all that is weak in the phase of human progress which is working out upon this continent."—Nation, xlviii. 13.

Buchanan, Robert Williams, b. 1841, in Glasgow, Scotland, is the son of Robert Buchanan, 1813–1866, a journalist and lecturer, who advocated the socialistic views of Robert Owen, and published several pamphlets and small books in 1839–40. The son was educated at Glasgow High School and University, and had for his college companion and intimate friend the poet David Gray, infra, with whom he shared a garret in London after their arrival in that city in 1860. His literary career began in that year, and has been active and prolific ever since. Besides the books enumerated below, he has produced some acting dramas,—A Nine Days' Queen, &c.,—has given public readings, and has been a frequent contributor to periodicals, especially the Contemporary Review. He visited the United States in 1884–85. 1. Undertones, Lon., 1863, 12mo; 2d ed., 1867. 2. Idylls and Legends of Inverburn, Lon., 1865, 12mo. 3. London Poems, Lon., 1866, 12mo.

"It is the life of London—and mostly the life of poor and erring people—which has drawn the poet into song; into giving a musical utterance and a recognized poetic life to the deep and sombre morals which underlie so much of what looks like the dull and common waste of sin. . . . On the whole, these 'London Poems' make good the promise of the 'Undertones.' They are true and genuine work, the result of real observation and personal emotion. . . . These verses have been lived before they were written down."—Ath., No. 2021.

"This is essentially an autobiography, being made up almost entirely of extracts from his private journals, which seem to have been very copious and full, containing often a minute account of the doings of each day. . . . It comprises only about one-fifth of the matter which was placed in the hands of the publisher by the widow. . . . The book before us is one of unquestionable interest and value, not only for its relation to the life of the illustrious naturalist, but also on account of the spirited and graphic pictures which it contains of the border and backwoods life of this country."—Nation, ix. 13.

8. David Gray, and other Essays, chiefly on Poetry, Lon., 1868, 12mo.

"The history of David Gray is full of melancholy interest; less tragic, it is true, than that of Chatterton, less absorbing, because of the infinitely smaller proportions of the central figure, than that of Keats, and yet simple enough and sad enough to win the regretful sympathies of every reader. . . . It is unfair to David Gray that his story, well and simply told as it is, should have to contend against the dead weight of the rest of the book."—Sat. Rev., xxvi. 372.

"There is a good deal to be said about the unwholesomeness not only of Mr. Rossetti's and Mr Swinburne's poetry, but of the mutual admiration in which they and their associates appear to live and move and have their being. . . . But apart from the question of Mr. Buchanan's good taste in putting himself forward as advocatus diaboli, it may be doubted whether he has shown himself capable of doing justice to his case. . . . There is, unhappily, a spreading taint of sensualism, which may be traced in various directions at the present moment, but it may be seriously doubted whether such productions as this pamphlet are not calculated rather to minister to than to check it."—*Sat. He is a good hater, and he does not hide his talent in a napkin; he veneers his solid Billingsgate with rhetoric of some color and polish; but all this must not blind us to the fact that he has ideals, and that he does truly regard the great names with which he makes free, and venerates them."—Nation, xliv. 411.

"A series of twenty-three articles has been prepared by twenty-two different authors, most of whom are already known for practical work or for research upon the matters entrusted to them. . . . It is doubtful, at least as respects the American public, whether their place could be as well filled by any other extant work."—Nation, xxix. 260.

In 1867 he was appointed inspector of salmon-fisheries. He became the highest authority of his day on pisciculture, and was indefatigable in his efforts to improve the British fisheries, salt-water and fresh. At his own expense he established the Museum of Economic Fish-Culture, which afterwards expanded into the International Fisheries Exhibition of 1883. He founded the journal called Land and Water, and contributed many papers to its columns, as well as to those of The Field. Buckle, Henry Thomas, F.R.A.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] b. at Lee, Eng. Owing to his delicate health when young, he received very little education, but in 1840, after the death of his father, a London ship-owner, he went abroad for a year, and studied the languages of the Continental countries with such avidity and success that in 1850 he could read nineteen languages with facility and converse fluently in seven. He passed most of the remainder of his life in London, engaged chiefly in the preparation of a work which was originally intended to be a general history of civilization. The first volume, which bore the title of History of Civilization in England, vol. i., was published, as stated ante, vol. i., in 1857; vol. ii., which treats of Spain and Scotland, in 1861, (not 1858, as stated ante, vol. i.) The work thus left incomplete, and forming in fact only an introduction, was republished as History of Civilization in England, France, Spain, and Scotland, 1866, 3 vols. p. 8vo. There have been six later editions, the last in 1878. Translations have been published in France, Germany, and Russia, and in the last-mentioned country the work has had an extensive circulation and a stronger influence than elsewhere. Buckle published nothing more, except some magazine articles and a pamphlet entitled A Letter to a Gentleman respecting Pooley's Case, 1859. For biog., see HUTH, A. H., infra. The Miscellaneous and Posthumous Works of Henry Thomas Buckle. Edited, with a Biographical Notice, by Helen Taylor. Lon., 1872, 3 vols. 8vo; abridged ed., edited by Grant Allen, 1885, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"The posthumous works consist of but Mr. Buckle's Commonplace-Books and some hundred and fifty notes or fragments, of various lengths. . . . As to what are called the 'Miscellaneous Works,' they consist . . . of but the single lecture and the single magazine article which marked the beginning, and we may also say the close, of Mr. Buckle's public career."—Ath., No. 2356.

"There are . . . pieces here which, fragmentary as they are, it was quite right to preserve and publish. But to publish a huge gathering, sometimes of obvious truths, sometimes of obvious blunders, bits from books which are in everybody's hands, bits from books which do not deserve to be in anybody's hands, is no real tribute to Mr. Buckle's memory."—*Sat. Budd, William, M.D., F.R.S., 1811–1880, b. at North Tawton, Devonshire, Eng.; studied medicine in London, Edinburgh, and Paris, graduating at the University of Edinburgh in 1838; settled in Bristol in 1842, and became physician to St. Peter's Hospital and the Bristol Royal Infirmary. His investigations in regard to the propagation of disease, and especially of typhoid fever, laid the foundation of the view now generally held in regard to this subject. Besides many contributions to medical journals, he published: 1. Malignant Cholera: its Mode of Propagation and its Prevention, Lon., 1849. 2. "His principal work, 'Typhoid Fever,' . . . reproducing in a more complete form what he had previously published in the medical journals, proved beyond dispute that typhoid fever is contagious, and is propagated chiefly by matter discharged from the intestine. . . . Professor Tyndall . . . writes thus: 'Dr. William Budd I hold to have been a man of the highest genius. There was no physician in England who, during his lifetime, showed anything like his penetration in the interpretation of zymotic disease. For a great number of years he conducted an uphill fight against the whole of his medical colleagues. . . . His doctrines are now everywhere victorious.'"—G. T. BETTANY: *Dict. of Nat. 3. The Life of Henry John Temple, Viscount Palmerston: with Selections from his Diaries and Correspondence: vols. i., ii., Lon., 1870, 8vo; vol. iii., 1874, 8vo. See ASHLEY, EVELYN, supra. (A new edition of vols. i. and ii., edited, with considerable additions and alterations, by Mr. Ashley, formed part of the complete work as published in 1876.)

"We could wish the life had been written by one who had lived more in his society, and could to a certain extent have Boswellized him, as he would have repaid the process more perhaps than most of our public men. As it is, the book, though a valuable contribution to history, is upon the whole rather dry, and very unlike what one's imagination had previously conceived of a life of Lord Palmerston."—Acad., vi. 575.

4. (Ed.) Selections from Lord Palmerston's Private Journals of Tours in France in 1815 and 1818, Lon., 1871, 8vo.

"As Sir H. Bulwer's materials for the personal biography of Lord Palmerston were necessarily scanty, he is fortunate in the discovery of a highly interesting fragment of his Journal. It is evident that Lord Palmerston was a quick and accurate observer; and all the extracts which Sir H. Bulwer has selected from his letters and diaries prove that he was an easy and lively writer."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 246.

5. Sir Robert Peel: an Historical Sketch, Lon., 1874, 8vo. Posth. (This is included in the 5th ed. of Historical Characters.)

(Contains three articles on the revised New Testament, and a reply to Bishop Ellicott's pamphlet in defence of the revisers and their text.)

"Vigorous, learned, full of audacities and self-assertiveness, these pages will prove, to those who take an interest in the subject, delightful reading. . . . In much of his criticism of the Revised Version I must confess myself very much at one with him. But if he supposes that he can turn back the course of critical inquiry, and re-establish the hitherto received text—or something much more like it than that of Drs. Westcott and Hort—in place of the conclusions of the most advanced scholarship, he will undoubtedly find that he has undertaken a hopeless task."—ROBERT B. DRUMMOND: Acad., xxv. 254.

44. To Educate Young Women like Young Men, and with Young Men, a Thing Inexpedient and Immodest, 1884. 45. Poems, (1840–1878,) Lon., 1885, 12mo. 46. Lives of Twelve Good Men, Lon., 1888, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. Posth. (Contains lives of Martin Joseph Routh, Hugh James Rose, Charles Marriott, Edward Hawkins, Samuel Wilberforce, Robert Lynch Cotton, Richard Greswell, Henry Octavius Coxe, Henry Longueville Mansel, William Jacobson, Charles Page Eden, and Charles Longuet Higgins.)

"The volumes possess a general and a special claim to public attention. Crowded as they are with anecdotes and with personal traits, they have attractions for the Pepyses and Boswells of the nineteenth century. But they also appeal, in the first place, to all who are interested in the religious life of the century, and especially to all who are students of the Tractarian movement and its subsequent development. They appeal, in the second place, to Oxonians in particular, as a precious portrait-gallery of Oxford worthies, and an invaluable collection of reminiscences respecting the lives and characters of some of her most distinguished sons."—Ath., No. 3183.

(An earlier edition of this book or a previous autobiography was published anonymously in 1855 under the title of The Autobiography of a Beggar Boy.)

"His early life was spent as a beggar. . . . At the age of fifty-seven he was at the same time a pauper and president of the Burns Club in Edinburgh. On the occasion of the Burns centenary he made a speech which was reported at full length in the Scotsman. . . . He now gladly availed himself of an opportunity of going to America, and at the age of sixty he landed in that country with his wife and four children, and exactly twelve and sixpence in ready money. . . . He complains that while in America he and his family were 'completely isolated from society.' . . . When he was seventy, he succeeded in getting an appointment as inspector of stores under the Great Eastern Railway Company. . . . At the age of eighty he received another grant from the Royal Literary Fund, and then he went to live with his daughters at Hammersmith, where he prepared the present book for the press. It would not surprise us if twenty years hence a second volume were to appear, describing the author's various experiences, vicissitudes, and hairbreadth escapes between the ages of eighty and a hundred. . . . The patient reader . . . will find a good deal to reward him. . . . Its most adverse critic ought at least to admit that it is a literary curiosity."—Sat. Rev., lv. 608.

Burnaby, Frederick Gustavus, 1842–1885, b. at Bedford, Eng.; educated at Harrow School and in Germany; was gazetted cornet in a cavalry regiment at the age of sixteen, and rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in 1880. He was remarkable for his great stature and enormous strength and his thirst for adventure, combined with a familiarity with several languages, including Turkish and Arabic, and a facile pen. He travelled in various countries, made many balloon-ascents, some of which were attended with great danger; was correspondent of the Times in Spain during the Carlist rebellion of 1874, and in the Soudan, whither he accompanied General Gordon in the same year, and acquired celebrity by a journey on horseback into Central Asia in the winter of 1875–76, when he penetrated as far as Khiva, but was then recalled at the request of the Russian government. In 1876–77 he made a similar tour in Asia Minor, and in the Russo-Turkish war of 1877–78 he commanded for a short time a Turkish brigade. He held a command as a volunteer in General Graham's expedition in the Eastern Soudan in 1884, and in the expedition sent to the relief of General Gordon in the following year, and was killed in the battle at Abu Klea. For biog., see WARE, J. R., and MANN, R. K. 1. The Practical Instruction of Staff Officers in Foreign Armies: a Lecture, 1872. 2. A Ride to Khiva: Travels and Adventures in Central Asia, Lon., 1876, 8vo; 15th ed., 1881; new ed., 1884.

"It is impossible to read what he has written, and to use the maps he has supplied, without feeling that he furnishes a key to the comprehension of the general scheme of Central Asia from Persia to China; for, although he only went to Khiva, he mastered this scheme himself and understood exactly how to bring it before others. . . . The demerit of Captain Burnaby as a traveller, or at any rate as a traveller in Russian Asia, is that he writes with an overpowering prepossession. . . . A one-sided book may, however, be an instructive one, and Captain Burnaby's book is unquestionably instructive. Within a narrow range it tells us much, and tells what it tells as well as any book that has been written on Russian Asia."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 663.

3. On Horseback through Asia Minor, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo; 6th ed., 1878.

"It cannot be said that his two volumes are ever dull. . . . The more substantial merits of the work, the traces it bears of a keen interest in men and things beyond the reach of civilization, the resolution, firmness, and adroitness which it indicates in the traveller himself, the light it throws on Turkey and the Turks, are incontestable."—Sat. Rev., xliv. 582.

Burnand, Francis Cowley, b. 1837; educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge; called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn 1862. While at college he founded a club known as the A. D. C., or Amateur Dramatic Club. He has written a large number of successful burlesques and other pieces for the stage, including a burlesque of Douglas Jerrold's nautical drama Black-Eyed Susan, which had a run of over four hundred consecutive nights in London, and a comedy called The Colonel, which was equally successful. He has been for a number of years one of the chief contributors to Punch, and in 1880, on the death of Mr. Tom Taylor, he became its editor. 1. Tracks for Tourists; or, The Continental Companion, Lon., 1864, p. 8vo. 2. Happy Thoughts, Lon., 1868, 12mo.

"Of the many 'Happy Thoughts' which have occurred either to Mr. Burnand or his hero, the thought of having such thoughts is the happiest. . . . Utterly ludicrous as his characters are, they are neither monstrosities nor abortions. They are exaggerations of what is perfectly real, living 'humours' combined too copiously, but not invented. They have too many sides, and each side is brought out in turn with too much completeness. But in every case the skeleton is familiar to us. When Mr. Burnand begins to sketch in the first outlines, we recognize them at once, and perhaps we wonder at the absence of all novelty. But then he overlays them with such a vivid wealth of caricature that we forget our first impression, and give ourselves up to the most uncritical enjoyment."—Ath., No. 2133.

"He has undeniably discovered a vein of facetiousness almost peculiar to himself, and works it with an industry and a success that is really surprising. It is, indeed, true that the fun is not brought from far below the surface. Nobody will suspect Mr. Burnand of being a deep thinker or a powerful satirist on the strength of his incessant flow of rather small jokes. The strain upon the intellect of author or of readers is remarkably small; and it is partly to that circumstance that his popularity is owing."—Sat. Rev., xxxviii. 90.

Burroughs, John, b. 1837, at Roxbury, N.Y.; became at first a teacher and afterwards a journalist; was a clerk in the treasury department at Washington from 1864 to 1873, and was then appointed receiver of a bank at Middletown, N.Y., engaging also in the business of fruit-raising at Esopus, N.Y. His publications consist chiefly of successive series of papers on rural topics contributed originally to the Atlantic Monthly and other magazines. 1. Notes on Walt Whitman, as Poet and Person, N. York, 1867, 16mo; 2d ed., 1871. 2. Wake-Robin, N. York, 1871, 16mo. 3. Winter Sunshine, N. York, 1876, 16mo.

"The minuteness of his observation, the keenness of his perception of all these things, give him a real originality, which is confirmed by a style sometimes indeed idiomatic and unfinished to a fault, but capable of remarkable felicity and vividness."—Nation, xxii. 66.

4. Birds and Poets, with other Papers, Bost., 1877, 16mo. 5. Locusts and Wild Honey, Bost., 1879, 16mo.

"It is a book which every lover of the woods and birds and every angler will take to his heart at once."—Nation, xxviii. 340.

6. Pepacton: Notes of a Walker, Bost., 1881, 16mo.

"He allows himself an amount of dogmatizing, in presence of nature, which is not only unattractive but quite unsafe. . . . We own to liking Mr. Burroughs best when he is least controversial, and when, on the other hand, he gives us something more than simple narrative. . . . On the whole, this must be pronounced one of Mr. Burroughs's best books. It shows more depth of thought than some of his writings; more care in execution than others: there is none of that occasional coarseness which marred some of his earlier descriptions; and he only gives two pages to Walt Whitman."—Nation, xxxiii. 16.

"A delightful book, of a sort whereof the Americans almost seem to have the monopoly. It is redolent throughout of the fresh air and the woodlands; and yet it is as full withal of culture as an egg is full of meat."—GRANT ALLEN: Acad., xx. 43.

"Pleasanter reading, to those who love the country, with all its enchanting sights and sounds, cannot be imagined."—Spectator, lvii. 1079.

7. Fresh Fields, Bost., 1884, 12mo. 8. Signs and Seasons, Bost., 1886, 16mo.

"In this last book of his . . . we catch his ripest utterance, his sunniest philosophy, his pleasantest imagery."—Critic, v. 270.

"There is the same exactness of observation, the same sense of a greater intimacy with wild life than is open through any other introduction, the same comradery of our guide with nature. . . . And yet it does not seem at the end that we had been much out of doors. . . . The book has a literariness which . . . interferes sadly with the simplicity of the common sounds and sights of nature which it reports."—Nation, xlii. 410.

"A lady enjoys facilities for penetrating Oriental households which are denied to men; and when these advantages are united to a spirit of adventure, a quick perception of native ways, a genuine sympathy with the poor and friendless, and considerable powers of description, they result in a book which takes us pleasantly over old ground, and discloses some scenes hitherto familiar only to such travellers as M. Vambéry, Mr. Palgrave, or Captain Burton himself."—Sat. Rev., xl. 271.

Burton, John Hill, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1809–1881; b. and educated at Aberdeen; pursued his legal studies in Edinburgh, and continued to reside in that city. As an advocate he had little practice, and for some years he subsisted chiefly by literature. In 1854 he was made secretary to the prison board of Scotland, and after the publication of his History of Scotland he became historiographer royal for that country. He was a constant contributor to Blackwood's Magazine, in which the papers that make up The Book-Hunter and The Scot Abroad originally appeared. A memoir by his widow is prefixed to a large-paper edition of The Book-Hunter, published in 1882. 1. (Ed.) Autobiography of the Rev. Dr. Alexander Carlyle, Minister of Inveresk: containing Memorials of the Men and Events of his Time: with Notes and a Supplementary Chapter, Edin. and Lon., 1860, 8vo. (See CARLYLE, ALEX., ante, vol. i.)

"Without recognizing the extraordinary merit and interest which Dr. Carlyle's countrymen seem to see in his autobiography, there is a good deal of curious and amusing matter in it."—Sat. Rev., xi. 20.

2. The Book-Hunter, Edin., 1862, 12mo; also a large-paper ed. of 25 copies; 2d ed., 1863; American edition, with Notes by R. G. White, N. York, 1862; new eds., 1882, 1884.

"Described by the author as 'sketches of the ways of book-collectors, scholars, literary investigators, desultory readers, and other persons whose pursuits revolve round books and literature.' It is a book pleasant to look at and pleasant to read,—pleasant, from its rich store of anecdote, its geniality, and its humour, even to persons who care little for the subjects of which it treats, but beyond measure delightful to those who are in any degree members of the above-mentioned fraternity."—Sat. Rev., xv. 504.

"Mr. Burton's merits as an historical writer are great. . . . He writes throughout in a thoroughly straightforward and unaffected way. Vivid and picturesque description is not his strong point. . . . When he has to deal with the great case of Queen Mary, his treatment of the subject becomes a model of argument."—Sat. Rev., xxiii. 403, 436.

"His 'History of Scotland' has, indeed, the field to itself at present, being as yet the only one composed with the accurate research which the modern standard of history demands. By complying with this peremptory condition Burton has distanced all competitors, but must in turn give way when one shall arise who, emulating or borrowing his closeness of investigation, shall add the beauty and grandeur due to the history of a great and romantic country."—R. "As Mr. Burton lacks neither knowledge nor spirit, so his 'Reign of Queen Anne' is abundantly instructive and frequently entertaining; but to any one who has expected to find in this thousand or so of pages something like a comprehensive survey of the period which they profess to cover, the substitute provided is likely to prove disappointing."—*Sat. Burton, Sir Richard Francis, K.C.M.G., F.R.G.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1821–1890. He passed several years of his early life with his parents in France and Italy; was subsequently entered at Oxford, but, having obtained a commission in the army, left the university and went to India in 1842, and after eight years of active service in the Bombay army, chiefly on the staff of Sir Charles Napier, entered on a career of travel and exploration, for which his love of adventure, his great linguistic attainments, and his intercourse with people of many different races qualified him in a high degree. His chief expeditions were to Medina and Mecca in 1853; to East Africa in 1855; to Central Africa (resulting in the discovery of Lake Tanganyika) in 1856–58; to the West Coast of Africa in 1861; and through the regions of South America lying south of Brazil in 1867; besides journeys across the United States, in Ireland, in Syria, &c. Probably no other traveller has ever explored so many diverse countries. His connection with the army, in which he attained no higher rank than that of captain, ceased in 1861, and since then he has been in the consular service, having held appointments at Fernando Po, Santos, (Brazil,) Damascus, and since 1872 at Trieste. He has received the gold medals of the English and French Geographical Societies. The following list of his publications includes a few mentioned ante, vol. i. He has also contributed papers to periodicals and notes to some works by other writers. For biog., see HITCHMAN, FRANCIS, infra. 1. (Edition limited to 1000 copies.)

"Captain Burton has, in truth, disfigured his book by his notes. They are foul blotches on the pages, being needlessly and therefore offensively gross. . . . Prepared for Household Reading by Justin H. McCarthy, M.P. Lon., 1886–88, 6 vols. 8vo.

"I guarantee that no mother shall regret her girl's reading this 'Arabian Nights.' You will be deprived of nothing of the original save 215 out of 3215 pages, and you have all the gain."—Lady Burton's Preface.

"It has been edited with the greatest care, and is as fit for household use as 'Alice in Wonderland.' Nor has it perceptibly lost in the process. On the contrary, . . . it distinctly gains by the elimination of stuff which is quite out of keeping with the characters of the heroines."—Spectator, lx. 469.

"Knowing his profound Oriental scholarship, his amazing gift of tongues, and the vast range of his reading, one could not have doubted that Sir Richard Burton's translation would be a noteworthy performance; but none, I imagine, were prepared for the fine tone and old-world flavour of the style which he has forged for himself on this occasion, or for the extraordinary richness, variety, and quaintness of his vocabulary. . . . We owe Lady Burton a large debt of gratitude for the happy thought which places an inaccessible work at the disposal of all sorts and conditions of readers."—AMELIA B. EDWARDS: Acad., xxx. 387.

"Of the pages of this remarkable biography it is difficult to say whether they reflect more strikingly the aspects and events of the great century in which Catharine lived and laboured or the personality of the saint herself. . . . Our authoress writes neither as a special pleader nor as a polemic theologian. She has a marvellous story to tell, the more marvellous, if it be not paradoxical to say so, the more it is shorn of its more disputable accidents; and she tells it with admirable simplicity, with great eloquence in many passages, with the most reverent sympathy with the noble subject of her biography, and in a fine spirit of catholic comprehensiveness."—Spectator, lii. 211.

Butler, Samuel, b. 1835, a grandson of Samuel Butler, Bishop of Lichfield, [q. v., ante, vol. i.;] educated at Shrewsbury School, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1858. He has published, in collaboration with Henry Festing Jones, a number of musical pieces, including gavottes, minuets, fugues, &c., for the piano, and a cantata, Narcissus. His literary works are numbered Opus 1 to 9, the first book on the following list being omitted from this enumeration "inasmuch as it was a youthful work," and Opus 7 being a selection from previous works. He is now engaged in writing a life of his grandfather, the Bishop of Lichfield. 1. A First Year in Canterbury Settlement, Lon., 1863, p. 8vo. 2. Erewhon; or, Over the Range, Lon., 1872, cr. 8vo. 3. The Fair Haven: a Work in Defence of the Miraculous Element of our Lord's Ministry upon Earth. By the late John Pickard Owen. With a Memoir of the Author by William Bickersteth Owen, (pseud.) Lon., 1873, 8vo. (The 2d ed., published in the same year, has the author's name on the title-page.)

"It purports to be a posthumous essay in defence of Christianity, and a memoir of the writer; but we cannot help doubting whether this elaborate framework is not a mere dramatic setting to views exactly the opposite of those apparently advocated. . . . The theory which . . . emerges as the most definite suggestion of the book is one that we have been often surprised not to find more prominent in rationalistic explanations of Christianity,—that Christ did not die upon the cross at all."—Spectator, xlvi. 1440.

4. Life and Habit, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1878.

"The main thesis of 'Life and Habit' is a suggestion towards the completion of the Darwinian theory, meaning thereby not so much the particular explanations most relied on by Mr. Darwin himself as the general doctrine of the continuity of life which does not belong to Mr. Darwin alone, but which Mr. Darwin more than any other man has made people believe in."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 119.

"The form which Mr. Butler's statements assume is frequently full of humour, but underlying all the fun there is a deep and serious purpose. The form is peculiarly his own, the scope of the argument he has in common with many thinkers of the present time. He is in full sympathy with the stream of tendency in science which strives to make religion, and ethics, and spiritual life merely problems in natural history. Readers of the voluminous and popular writings of Von Hartmann will observe a striking resemblance between his methods and results and those of Mr. Butler. . . . Unconscious intelligence, will, and purpose are with both the great solvents of all difficulties."—Spectator, li. 187.

5. Evolution, Old and New; or, The Theories of Buffon, Dr. Erasmus Darwin, and Lamarck, as compared with that of Mr. Charles Darwin, Lon., 1879, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1882.

"He undertakes to assure the overwhelming majority of men of science and the educated public who have followed their lead that, while they have done well to be converted to the doctrine of the evolution and transmutation of species, they have been converted on entirely wrong grounds."—*Sat. "He has chosen his ground well. The region which lies in and about the southern spurs of the Alps, from the Po to the Ticino, is not much visited as yet by tourists. It contains, nevertheless, some of the loveliest scenery in Europe."—Ath., No. 2827.

"He has spoilt his book by thinking too little of his subject and too much of everything else. . . . His descriptions of scenery are clear, bright, and spontaneous."—Acad., xxi. 39.

8. Luck, or Cunning, as the Main Means of Organic Modification? Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"Here is a work of consummate ingenuity, rare literary skill, and a certain happy vein of sardonic humour,—a work pregnant with epigram, sparkling with wit, and instinct throughout with a powerful original fancy,—flung out upon the world in the uncongenial guise of a scientific treatise, and scarcely likely ever to meet the eyes of anybody except those who will regard it merely in the light of a futile piece of vain argument against Charles Darwin's theory of natural selection."—GRANT ALLEN: Acad., xxx. 413.

"More than half his book is taken up with onslaughts of great vigour and minute detail on Mr. Herbert Spencer, Prof. Ray Lankester, Mr. Romanes, Mr. Grant Allen, and most of all on Mr. Darwin. . . . We still believe that he is on the right track in seeing the motive power of evolution in mind, not matter, for therein is the difference between the two views. But because we think he is upholding the important truth we regret to see him damaging it by needless and often petty aspersions of the upholders of the opposite views."—Ath., No. 3091.

9. Ex Voto: an Account of the Sacro Monte or New Jerusalem at Varallo-Sesia: with some Notice of Tabachetti's remaining Work at the Sanctuary of Crea. Illust. 1888, cr. 8vo.

"This singular book, with its vivid descriptions, its strange and fascinating illustrations, its startling ideas,—amounting often to discoveries and new departures in the world of religious art,—its criticism, full of knowledge and originality, if also of a certain mocking spirit which destroys the effect of it for some minds,—this book, with all its peculiarities, is certainly a striking contribution to literature of the kind."—Spectator, lxi. 1065.

Butler, Major-Gen. Sir William Francis, K.C.B., b. 1838, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland. He entered the army as ensign in 1858; served on the Red River expedition 1870–71, and was sent on a special mission to the Saskatchewan territories, and in the following year made a remarkable journey across the interior of British America. In 1873 he served in the Ashanti expedition, and in 1875 was sent on special service to Natal, where he also held an appointment as quartermaster-general, &c., in 1879–80. He accompanied the expeditionary force to Egypt in 1882, and to the Soudan in 1884–85, when he was left in command of the forces on the Upper Nile. In 1889 he was appointed assistant adjutant-general on the general staff, with special duties. He married, in 1877, Miss Elizabeth Thompson, the well-known painter of military subjects. 1. 3. The Wild North Land: being the Story of a Winter Journey with Dogs across Northern North America. Illust. and Map. Lon., 1872; new ed., 1875, cr. 8vo.

"His book carries us along with it; and that is the one essential and sufficient merit in a book of travels."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii. 57.

"Captain Butler succeeds in rendering his narrative extremely interesting and attractive by his wonderful power of description."—Acad., v. 139.

"A narrative of a journey from the Red River of the North across the Saskatchewan to Athabasca Lake and the waters flowing to the Arctic Ocean, thence west along Peace River . . . to and through the Rocky Mountains, and thence down Fraser River to the Pacific Coast. . . . The book . . . gives a most interesting account of the daily incidents and adventures, the large animals and few men, that one meets in travelling over the great northern plains."—Nation, xix. 272.

"Not only does it supply interesting information about the preparation of the Nile flotilla, but, owing to the descriptive ability of the author, the successive stages of the long voyage are brought vividly before the reader. Indeed, it is as if he were shown a panorama of the wonderful river by an artist capable of explaining by word of mouth all that the brush failed to convey."—Ath., No. 3111.

Buxton, Mrs. Bertha H., (Leupold,) 1844–1881, was of German parentage, her mother being Madame Thérèse Leupold, well known in musical circles. She was educated at a boarding-school in London, and in her fourteenth and fifteenth year she travelled with her parents in America, Germany, and Holland. At the age of sixteen she was married to Henry Buxton, club manager and author. In 1875 she found herself suddenly poverty-stricken, and, becoming dependent on her own exertions, she turned to writing for a living. She was for some time a "walking lady" in a theatre at Exeter, and the knowledge of theatrical matters thus acquired was turned to account in some of her novels. 1. Percy's Wife: a Story. By B. H. B. Lon., 1867, p. 8vo. 2. Jennie of the Prince's: a Novel. By B. H. B. Lon., 1876, 3 vols. p. 8vo: new ed., 1877.

"We learn from a preface to this novel that it is 'a story with an object;' and that object is to prove that 'a right-minded woman can, in spite of youth, personal attractions, and an unguarded position, hold her own bravely even on the much-abused stage,' . . . preserving her purity and simplicity from first to last. . . . A reader who ventures on the book in spite of the author's frank warning will find that an 'object' does not necessarily make a book dull."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 302.

Buxton, Charles, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1823–1871, third son of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; became a partner in the brewery with which his father was connected, and was elected to Parliament in 1857, 1859, and 1865, retaining his seat till his death. Besides his biography of his father, (ante, vol. i.,) which went rapidly through three editions, he published a pamphlet on National Education in Ireland, (1853,) and another on Self-Government for London, (1869.) 1. Slavery and Freedom in the British West Indies, 1860. 2. How to Stop Drunkenness, Lon., 1864, 8vo. 3. The Ideas of the Day on Policy, Lon., 1865, 8vo; 3d ed., 1868. 4. Notes of Thought. Preceded by a Biographical Sketch by Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies, M.A. Lon., 1873, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1883.

"These posthumous 'Notes of Thought' are full of delicate observation and reflection, and go far to justify in itself the remark quoted by Mr. Llewelyn Davies from Mr. W. E. Forster,—Mr. Charles Buxton's cousin,—that the gap which Mr. Buxton has left is bigger even than the place which he seemed to fill in society."—Spectator, xlvi. 110.

"It consists of a series of reflections, written down apparently as they presented themselves, on a variety of subjects, religious, social, or political . . . The book well deserves to be popular, if only as showing how excellent a life may be led in spite of the disadvantage of almost unmixed prosperity and domestic comfort."—Sat. Rev., xxxv. 55.

"Dividing the past history of words into three sets of laws,—those of their original production, those of their subsequent change in utterance or form, and those of their subsequent change in meaning,—he declares that only the second set have been investigated with any considerable success, that very little progress has been made in the third set, and that inquiry into the first set has been pronounced to be at present chimerical. It is this last 'axiom of despair' which he now undertakes to disprove. . . . The reasoning is clearly and closely expressed."—Sat. Rev., lxv. 301

Cable, George Washington, b. 1844, in New Orleans; became in 1859 a clerk; entered the Confederate service in 1863; returned to mercantile employment after the war; was for a time a regular contributor to the New Orleans Picayune, writing under the signature of "Drop Shot," and ultimately devoted himself to literature, becoming widely known by his sketches of Creole life published originally in Scribner's Monthly, and combining authorship with public readings of selections from his works. He has also prepared reports for the government on the condition of the people in parts of Western Louisiana. 1. Old Creole Days, N. York, 1879; new ed., 1883, 2 vols. 12mo. 2. The Grandissimes: a Story of Creole Life, N. York, 1880, 12mo.

"In painting the Creole life of New Orleans at the beginning of the century he has in effect broken new ground, and, as the soil is rich, one's first impression is that he has contented himself with merely overturning it. But, rich as it is, it needs an artist to exploit it with the success shown in 'The Grandissimes,' and Mr. Cable is a literary artist of unusual powers. . . . The poetic vein in Mr. Cable is well developed and defined, and the picture he conjures up from the old Louisiana levees and swamps is steeped in sentiment. . . . It would be doing 'The Grandissimes' an injustice, however, to imply that it is only a charming picture cleverly painted. It deals with graver elements of social existence than mere picturesqueness; and though the society it depicts no longer exists, and its problems have been solved by time, it is none the less a serious and important work. . . . What prevents 'The Grandissimes' from taking the front rank in contemporary fiction is its weakness in portraiture of an intellectual interest."—Nation, xxxi. 415.

"Mr. Cabot has taken a modest view of his duty; he has not attempted an estimate of Emerson or of his just place among the men and the spiritual forces of his generation. He has rightly judged that the time has not yet come for that. . . . What we find, then, in these volumes is an admirably stated narrative of the facts of Emerson's uneventful life, some account of his ancestry, large extracts from Emerson's journals, . . . and a considerable number of his letters. Interwoven with these are accounts of Emerson's nearer friends and of his relation to some of the leading events and movements of his time. . . . Mr. Cabot appears to us to have done a difficult task with singular skill and success."—Nation, xlv. 215.

"The peculiar quality of the work is its charming or irritating discursiveness,—readers must make their choice of epithet. Mrs. Caddy is genuinely interested in Linnæus, and much research and travel have enabled her to tell everything about him that the reader is likely to want to know. . . . When we add that Mrs. Caddy has thoughts upon many things entirely unconnected with botany, and that she expresses them as they arise, it may be thought that poor Linnæus must be altogether lost. This, however, is really not the case. . . . The history of science presents no more attractive figure, and Mrs. Caddy, amidst all her digressions, has not failed to do it justice."—Spectator, lx. 1218.

Caine, Thomas Henry Hall, b. 1853, at Runcorn, Cheshire, Eng.; was brought up to the architectural profession, and contributed to the Builder and other architectural journals. In 1880 he abandoned architecture for journalism, and in 1881 went to London, where he became house-mate of Dante Gabriel Rossetti in Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, remaining there until the death of Rossetti. In collaboration with Mr. Wilson Barrett he has produced two plays, Ben-my-Chree, (dramatized from The Deemster,) and Good Old Times. He has contributed to journals and reviews, writing frequently for the London Academy. 1. Richard III. and Macbeth: the Spirit of Romantic Play in Relationship to the Principles of Greek and of Gothic Art, and to the Picturesque Interpretations of Mr. Henry Irving, Lon., 1877, 8vo. 2. "Mr. Caine's recollections of Rossetti are likely to stimulate rather than satisfy public curiosity concerning one of the most interesting and remarkable figures belonging to the present generation. . . . The aim of his work scarcely extends beyond supplying the particulars of those closing years over which his acquaintance with the poet-painter extended. . . . Light is now cast upon many events in Rossetti's life over which for the most discreet of his friends there hung a veil of mystery, and the conditions which made a recluse of one of the gentlest and most sociable of men are indicated."—Ath., No. 2871.

8. The Deemster: a Romance of the Isle of Man, Lon., 1887, 3 vols. cr. 8vo.

"As a picture of Manx life the book is marvellously faithful. . . . Evidently, however, Mr. Caine aspires to do more than write a story of province. 'The Deemster' is meant to be a powerful tragedy; and here, too, the writer has been successful, but successful with certain qualifications. . . . All that was needed to make a really fine story finer still was that power of artistic selection which only comes with long practice in art."—Ath., No. 3136.

"At last we have in English a book which will tell any one, accustomed to philosophical reading and who will read it with attention, what it was that Kant had to say, how he came to say it as he did, and how it has happened that what he said has had such a different significance for different enquirers who have followed him to the same field. . . . He [Prof. Caird] has done his work with admirable completeness and lucidity."—T. H. GREEN: Acad., xii. 297.

Caird, Rev. John, D.D., LL.D., [ante, vol. i., add.,] b. 1820, at Greenock, Scotland, and educated at the University of Glasgow; was ordained a minister of the Scotch Established Church 1845; became minister of Park Church, Glasgow, 1857; professor of divinity in the University of Glasgow in 1862, and principal of the university in 1873. 1. An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion, Glasgow, 1880, 8vo.

"The book is Hegelian throughout. It is a remarkable book in many ways,—remarkable in that it proceeds from the pen of a Scottish clergyman, bred in the Presbyterianism of Scotland, nurtured on the metaphysic of the Scottish school and on the theology of the Westminster Confession. It is remarkable also for its marvellous power of exposition and graceful subtlety of thought. Hegel's solution of the problems of religion is at length adequately represented in English literature. Hegelianism has never appeared so attractive as it appears in the clear and fluent pages of Principal Caird. It must be confessed, however, that the book is hard reading. We feel that we are learning a new language. . . . Hegelianism is without relation to the speech which men use, to the process by which they reason."—Spectator, liii. 692.

Campbell, Lord Archibald, b. 1846, son of the eighth Duke of Argyll. Records of Argyll: Legends, Traditions, and Recollections of Argyllshire Highlanders: collected chiefly from the Gaelic. Illust. Edin. and Lon., 1885, 4to.

"In opening up those rich mines of poetic and romantic legend for which the West Highlands have always been famous, Lord Archibald Campbell in this handsome volume has done something more than give the public a chapter of family or even local history. As such, indeed, the book is sufficiently fascinating (for there is scarcely a tale told here which was not worth the telling); but it is a really valuable acquisition to the student of anthropology. . . . So handsome a volume as this is not often issued from the press. Evidently no expense has been spared in getting it up. The etchings (seventeen in number) are by Mr. Charles Laurie. Though most of them are good, they are of various degrees of merit."—Ath., No. 3041.

Campbell, George Douglas, eighth Duke of Argyll, K.G., K.T., D.C.L., LL.D., [ante, vol. i., add.,] b. 1823, at Ardencaple Castle, Dumbartonshire; succeeded his father in 1847; was lord privy seal 1853–55, 1859–60, and 1880–81, postmaster-general 1855–58, and secretary of state for India 1868–74. The duke's political career has been described as that of a "Whig by family, Liberal by intellect, Independent by nature, and Conservative by inclination." He has taken an active interest in scientific research, while rejecting theories inimical to orthodox Christianity. He has been chancellor of the University of St. Andrews and rector of the University of Glasgow, has presided over a meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and has been a frequent contributor to the Contemporary Review and other periodicals. 1. "Whatever may be the merit and success of the essayist's suggestions, he at least takes up the mental position which alone can promise usefulness in the treatment of such a question. He has no reserves on the side of science. He has no hesitation on the side of religion. . . . This system, which is indeed by no means new, but is expounded by the Duke of Argyll with great clearness and freshness of illustration, places the supernatural, not in a power interfering with law, but in a design contriving combinations."—*Sat. "In the face of the materialistic or agnostic tendencies characteristic of so much of the spirit of modern science, he boldly takes his stand upon the older ground of an originating and overruling Mind perceptible in nature. He is able to discern a true and definite design or teleological plan, to which is due the unity which he makes it his task to demonstrate as the law of the cosmos or entire system of the universe. . . . A master, on the one hand, of the processes and results which observational science has made sure, and, on the other hand, accepting without misgiving or reserve the fundamental doctrines of religion as of divine authority and inspiration, he shows himself eminently qualified to hold the balance between the claims of science and of theism, and to vindicate that unity and harmony in the whole domain of thought which he views as the goal of all well-directed speculation."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 794.

"Any readaptation of theology towards the new thought inaugurated by Darwin will scarcely take the line of a direct denial of the brain-conceptions which underlie the theory of evolution, the continuity of existence and development due to laws working within the cosmos. The force of the late Prof. Green's attempted reconstruction of the religious ideal lay in his recognition of this need and his attempt to meet it. . . . In his attempt to return to the more mechanical theology of the last century the Duke of Argyll has not advanced the cause of religion nor aided the all-important reconciliation of science and religion." —Ath., No. 2941.

"It is a contribution rather to the solution of the agrarian problem in Scotland than to its history. . . . The Duke of Argyll always writes well in the rhetorical sense. In such sense he never wrote better than in 'Scotland as it was and as it is,' for in it he fights for his own hand, and his own (as he thinks) land."—WILLIAM WALLACE: Acad., xxxi. 175.

"The work is essentially an apology, a defence not merely of his political and economic principles, but of his very existence as a great landed proprietor, the inheritor of broad ancestral acres. . . . Some will think that the duke's cause needs no defence, and some that it is indefensible. But both should study his work, which, in truth, is a gage of championship and defiance."—Ath., No. 3098.

"No more eloquent book on the subjects with which it deals . . . has lately appeared; none more earnest, none more transparently, almost fiercely, sincere. . . . The very one-sidedness of the Duke of Argyll's book gives it a special value."—Spectator, lx. 388.

Campbell, Rev. John, [ante, vol. i., eighth of the name there mentioned, add.,] 1794–1867, b. at Forfar, Scotland, was a blacksmith, but left that trade and studied theology at Glasgow. He was minister of the Tabernacle, Moorfields, London, for twenty years, but gave up his charge to devote himself wholly to literature. He founded and edited the British Standard and other religious papers. Besides the books mentioned ante, vol. i., he published: 1. Maritime Discovery and Christian Missions, considered in their Mutual Relations. Illust. Lon., 1840, 8vo. 2. Christian Fellowship for Young People: with a Practical Essay on Marriage, Lon., 1840, 8vo. 3. Monopoly and Unrestricted Circulation of the Sacred Scriptures contrasted, Lon., 1840, 12mo. 4. With RICHARDSON, JAMES WILBERFORCE, Sermons preached in the Tabernacle and Tottenham Court Chapel, London, Lon., 1846, 8vo. Also, single addresses, &c.

Campbell, John, first Baron Campbell, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1779–1861, was lord chancellor from 1859 till his death. Most of his works are mentioned ante, vol. i. 1. Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements considered in a Letter to J. Payne Collier, Esq., F.S.A., Lon., 1859, 8vo. 2. Lives of Lords Lyndhurst and Brougham, (vol. viii. of Lives of the Chancellors,) Lon., 1869, 8vo.

"Of all Lord Campbell's biographies, the Lives of his two eminent contemporaries are in tone and feeling the worst. . . . He is almost uniformly ill-natured. . . . The Life of Lord Brougham is fuller and more interesting than the Life of Lord Lyndhurst, and the narrative, notwithstanding the spirit of detraction which pervades it, conveys a vivid impression of restless and imperfectly-regulated energy."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 181.

3. Life of John, Lord Campbell, consisting of a Selection from his Autobiography, Diary, and Letters. Edited by his Daughter, the Hon. Mrs. Hardcastle. Lon., 1881, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed. same year.

"The narrative which has been compiled with remarkable skill and judgment by Mrs. Hardcastle is entirely of his own composition. . . . It has happened to but few men of eminence to admit the world at large to so complete a knowledge of their lives and characters."—Sat. Rev., li. 177.

Campbell, Gen. Sir John, C.B., K.C.S.I., 1802–1877, b. at Kingsburgh, in the island of Skye; entered the army 1819; served in India, and during several years, from 1837, had charge of the hill tribes of Orissa, and succeeded in suppressing the practices of human sacrifice and female infanticide. His policy having been abandoned by his successor, Captain Macpherson, disturbances ensued, and in 1847 the appointment was again conferred upon Campbell, who held it till obliged by ill health to return to Scotland in 1855. 1. Narrative by Major-General John Campbell, C.B., of his Operations in the Hill Tracts of Orissa for the Suppression of Human Sacrifice and Infanticide, Lon., 1861, 8vo. Printed for private circulation. 2. A Personal Narrative of Thirteen Years' Service amongst the Wild Tribes of Khondistan for the Suppression of Human Sacrifice, Lon., 1863, 8vo.

"It is something far more wise and suggestive than an ordinary book of travels. . . . We can only hope that commissions such as that executed so completely by General Campbell may be often intrusted to as steady a head, as firm a hand, and as large a heart."—Sat. Rev., xvi. 825.

Campbell, John Francis, 1822–1885, son of Walter Frederick Campbell, infra; educated at Eton, and at the University of Edinburgh; was at one time secretary to the light-house commission, and occupied other posts in the public service, while spending his leisure in scientific studies, and in the collection of folk-lore tales among the western Highlanders. He was the inventor of the sunshine recorder for indicating the varying intensity of the sun's rays. He edited his father's Life in Normandy, published several books anonymously, and left others in manuscript. 1. Popular Tales of the West Islands, orally collected, with a Translation, Edin., 1860–62, 4 vols. fp. 8vo.

"Mr. Campbell has brought together in his introduction and his notes much that is valuable and curious. The coincidences which he has pointed out between the stories of the Western Highland and other parts of the Aryan world are striking in themselves, and will be useful for further researches. But the most valuable parts of his work are the stories themselves. For these he will receive the thanks of all who are interested in the study of language and popular literature."—*Sat. "Mr. Campbell, of Islay, had, according to his own statement, nothing to do, so he turned 'globe-trotter,' and spent a year in wandering round the globe. . . . Mr. Campbell has an easy, graphic style, a fresh, ready perceptiveness, and a genial humour, all of which combine to carry the reader on."—Spectator, xlix. 982.

2. Guido and Lita: a Tale of the Riviera, [verse,] Lon., 1875, 16mo; 3d ed. same year.

"The poem is written with considerable facility, some power of observation and description, and occasional ingenuity; but it is also written as if the author had studiously avoided taking counsel of any of the really great masters of English verse in days earlier or later than the brief reign of feeble and frigid convention which apparently he has chosen as his ideal."—Sat. Rev., xl. 684.

3. The Book of Psalms, literally rendered in Verse; 1st and 2d eds., Lon., 1877, 8vo.

"It is an experiment made with the object of supplying the Scottish churches with a substitute for the Psalters of Rous which shall at least not offend by false rhymes. . . . The merits of this new version are not pre-eminent."—Acad., xii. 381.

4. Memories of Canada and Scotland: Speeches and Verses, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

Campbell, Rev. John McLeod, D.D., 1800–1872, b. at Kilninver, Argyleshire, Scotland, and educated at Glasgow University. He completed his theological studies at Edinburgh, was licensed as a preacher in 1821, and in 1825 was appointed to the parish of Row, near Cardross. About 1830 he was found guilty by the General Assembly of teaching heretical doctrines concerning "assurance" and "universal atonement," and was deprived of his living. In 1833 he became minister of a congregation in Glasgow, and retained that position till 1859, receiving no remuneration for his labors, but exercising by his preaching and writing a considerable influence on religious thought in Scotland. 1. Candler, C., of Melbourne, Victoria. The Prevention of Consumption: a Mode of Prevention founded on a New Theory of the Tubercle-Bacillus, Lon., 1887, 8vo.

"Although agreement with all the author's views is scarcely possible, it is quite refreshing to meet with so much originality, backed by such close cogency of reasoning. . . . The inherent weakness of the author's thesis is the want of demonstration. . . . Briefly stated, the author's contention is that Koch is wrong in maintaining that the tubercle-bacillus is a pure parasite, completing its whole cycle of existence in its animal host, . . . and passing to and infecting fresh individuals by means of dust-carried spores. Per contra, he argues that tubercle-bacillus, as we know it, is but one phase in the life-history of a low form of vegetable, . . . that it is an endemic malaria which hangs about certain rooms and districts and poisons the occupants more or less. . . . The work is full of suggestive material."—Sat. Rev., lxiii. 849.

Carleton, William, [ante, vol. i., where the year and place of his birth are incorrectly given, add.,] 1794–1869, b. at Prillisk, County Tyrone, Ireland, son of a small farmer; educated at a "hedge school," and afterwards by Rev. Dr. Keenan, of Glasslough; was subsequently a tutor in private families; commenced his literary career by a sketch entitled The Lough-Derg Pilgrim, which was published in a Dublin magazine and afterwards included with others in Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. A long series of stories and novels followed, many of which passed through several editions, and were translated into French, German, and Italian. Notwithstanding this productiveness, he became embarrassed in his circumstances, and was granted a pension of £200, on the recommendation of many persons of all ranks and creeds. He has been described as "the truest, the most powerful, and the tenderest delineator of Irish life," (Dict. of Nat. Biog., vol. ix. p. 98.) The following list of his works includes those which are mentioned ante, vol. i., and some published after his death: 1. Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. Two series. 1830 and 1833; new ed., with an Autobiographical Introduction, Explanatory Notes, and Illustrations, 1843–44; new ed., 1881. 2. Tales of Ireland, 1834, 8vo. 3. Carlyle, Jane Baillie, (Welsh,) 1801-1866, daughter of John Welsh, of Craigenputtock, Scotland, whose ancestor of the same name married a daughter of John Knox. She was educated at a school at Haddington, taught by Edward Irving, who lived for a time at her father's house, and who sought a release from an engagement previously formed, in order to marry her. In 1826 she became the wife of Thomas Carlyle, infra. 1. Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle. Prepared for Publication by Thomas Carlyle. Edited by James Anthony Froude. Lon., 1883, 3 vols. 8vo.

"They form altogether a pathetic and instructive record of the private history of a woman who will henceforth be remembered and honoured, not only or chiefly because she was the wife of a man of genius, but on account of her own virtues and talents. . . . We have no space left in which to do justice to the humour and the pungent wit, the delicious naïveté, and the power of expressing spontaneous thoughts, grave and gay, in choice language, which make at least a hundred of the letters contained in these volumes worth preserving as choice specimens of letter-writing apart altogether from their personal interest."—Ath., No. 2893.

"With a little suppression of the innumerable repetitions concerning bad nights, digestion, insect annoyances, and other household matters, . . . these three volumes might be compressed into two of the most fascinating in the English language. . . . Were all such redundancies . . . eliminated, there would remain in these volumes ample stores of vivacity, and brightness, and satire, and pathos, and patience and impatience, and humour and wit."—Spectator, lvi. 483.

Carlyle, Thomas, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1795-1881. The notice of Carlyle ante, vol. i., covers nearly the whole period of his literary activity. After many years of toilsome struggle and gradual emergence from obscurity, the hard-won recognition of his genius had extended from a comparatively small circle to the general mass of intelligent readers. There was no longer any question as to his pre-eminence in the world of letters among his English contemporaries, and his installation as lord rector of the University of Edinburgh in 1866 was received as an expression and confirmation of the public verdict to that effect. In 1874 he accepted the Order of Merit from the Prussian government, but declined an offer made to him by Disraeli of the Grand Cross of the Bath and a pension. On his eightieth birthday a medal was presented to him, and an address signed by many persons of note in literature, science, and art. But these acknowledgments came when, like Johnson, he was old and could not enjoy them, when he was solitary and could not impart them. The death of his wife during his absence in Edinburgh in 1866 deepened the gloom which had never been wholly absent from his life, and which had its original source, not in mere physical ills or in adverse circumstances, but in his mental constitution. He died on the 4th of February, 1881, and was buried in the kirkyard of Ecclefechan, the offer of a burial in Westminster Abbey being declined in accordance with his own understood wish.

Within a brief period after Carlyle's death the incidents of his career and the details of his private life and family and social relations were laid bare in a degree never before witnessed in the case of any individual, however conspicuous or widely known. The immediate effect, however, was not a full and accurate view, but a distorted perspective, in which every fault or blemish was magnified and made prominent, while great and noble qualities were obscured or overlooked. Yet it may be doubted whether on the whole there has ever been a character that could have passed through such an ordeal with less of permanent stain or essential disfigurement.

In regard to Carlyle's rank in literature it will remain for posterity to pronounce a decision with little aid from the diverse verdicts of his contemporaries. Although he was the first to introduce into English criticism a comprehensive and objective method of investigation as the ground of an enlightened judgment, no eminent writer of the time has been himself so little the subject of criticism of this description. Neither eulogy nor censure has been lacking, but of full and penetrative discussion no adequate specimens can be adduced. Perhaps the chief difficulty has lain in the fact that Carlyle stands alone and cannot be assigned a place in any group or class. It is rather by incidental testimony of the impression he has produced upon his age than by direct expression of opinion that we can form any forecast of the estimate which will hereafter be put upon his work. From this point of view it may not be unsafe to predict that he will be regarded as the most vivid and original of English prose writers, and the one whose influence on thought and action has been the most stimulating, wide-reaching, and profound. 1. History of Friedrich the Second, called Frederick the Great, Lon., 1858–65, 6 vols. 8vo. (The first two volumes are included in the list given ante, vol. ii.)

"If he had succeeded better in making a hero of Frederick, his history would have had much less historical value. As it is, it appears to be not only the best, but almost the only history in English which gives any account of any considerable section of German history which it is possible to read with interest or to remember when it is read in any tolerable degree. . . . The six thick volumes are an immense repertory, in which something is to be found about nearly every important event in European history which was in any way whatever connected with Prussia or with Frederick. It also contains a number of detached anecdotes and personal histories so elaborate, so authentic, in some instances so inconceivably picturesque and vivid, that, wherever the book is opened, it has all the interest of a novel."—Fraser's Magazine, lxxii. 778.

"Infinitely the wittiest book that ever was written, . . . a book with so many memorable and heroic facts, working directly, too, to practice; with new heroes, things unvoiced before; with a range of thought and wisdom the largest and the most colloquially elastic that ever was. not so much applying as inoculating to every need and sensibility of a man, so that I do not so much read a stereotype page as I see the eyes of the writer looking into my eyes, with winks and long-commanding glances, and stereoscoping every figure that passes, and every hill, river, wood, hummock, and pebble in the long perspective; and withal a book that is a Judgment Day, for its moral verdict on the men and nations and manners of modern times."—Emerson's Diary, ap. Correspondence of Carlyle and Emerson, ii. 272, note.

"Although in the prophetic sight of the writer that most remarkable book may, at the moment it was written, have borne a conscious reference to events which were still future but have since most wonderfully illustrated its great theme, the world in general recognized nothing of the sort in it. The author, if he knew himself to be a vox clamantis at the time, must have been astonished at the rapidity with which his Gospel of Force triumphed as soon as it had its chance. Some of us shook our heads over it, one great man amongst us, whose place I am proud to occupy, I dare not say to fill, did not hesitate to speak words of summary condemnation; but the doctrine itself was esoteric, the words, like much else of Carlyle's, were φωνάντα συνέτοισιν, but συνέτοισιν only; to the ears of the many they required the sacred interpreter."—WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., (now Bishop of Oxford:) Seventeen Lectures on the Study of Mediæval and Modern History and Kindred Subjects, 60.

"Just at the time when the first instalment of Carlyle's 'Life of Frederick' was published, I found him [Macaulay] engaged in the perusal of the opening chapters. His wrath—I can use no milder word—against Carlyle's style was boundless. He read aloud to me four or five of the most Carlylean sentences, and then, throwing the book on the library table, exclaimed, 'I hold that no Englishman has the right to treat his mother-tongue after so unfilial a fashion.' . . . Before a week had elapsed I was again at Holly Lodge, and he at once recurred to Carlyle's history. 'Pray read it,' he said, 'as soon as you can find time. Of course I have not got, and never shall get, reconciled to his distortions and contortions of language; but there are, notwithstanding, passages of truly wonderful interest and power, and in the infinite variety of new historical facts, and in the delight and instruction they afford, it my first feeling has been that of annoyance at the strange way of telling the story, my second and permanent feeling is one of gratitude that—even in such a way—the story has been told.'"—*Reminiscences and Essays, by James Montgomery Stuart, ap. 4. The Early Kings of Norway; also, an Essay on the Portraits of John Knox, Lon., 1875, p. 8vo.

"No one would refer an inquiring reader, completely ignorant of the subject, and desirous of forming an idea of what Mr. Carlyle has done and can do, to this book. And yet it has on it the image and superscription of the master. We have been more struck with the power than with the falling of power of which it affords proof."—Spectator, xlviii. 1091.

5. Reminiscences. Edited by James Anthony Froude. Lon., 1881, 2 vols. p. 8vo. Re-edited by Charles Eliot Norton, 1887, 2 vols. p. 8vo. (In regard to the circumstances under which these Reminiscences were composed, and Carlyle's own views as to the editing and publication of them, compare the statements of Mr. Froude and Mr. Norton in their respective prefaces.)

"It is impossible to entertain any doubts as to the curious interest and value of the matter thus thrown open to the public gaze. The various reminiscences taken together, and sometimes overlapping and repeating themselves, as might be expected, form a very near approach to a full autobiography, with the singular feature that the writer does not form the central figure or hero of his story. This circumstance gives an unusual charm and freedom to the narrative. Carlyle is always discoursing of other people as his subject, and not ostensibly of himself; but the triple strand which he has thus spun supplies an almost complete history of his own life. It is sometimes harsh and rough, and often sad and sombre enough; but through it all runs and gleams the golden thread of tender recollections of his wife."—Sat. Rev., li. 370.

"He betrays a narrowness of judgment about his contemporaries which contrasts strangely with the catholicity of his sympathies in the past. He could be both just and generous in his estimate of characters as various as Voltaire and Mahomet, Cromwell and Burns, Diderot, and Cagliostro, and yet was neither just nor generous to Lamb or Coleridge, Scott or Hazlitt, Wilson or De Quincey."—Ath., No. 2841.

6. Reminiscences of my Irish Journey in 1849, Lon., 1882, cr. 8vo.

"The style of the book is rather remarkable. It is Carlylese in its most eruptively volcanic form, unrestrained by any such thought of artistic shape as that displayed in the 'Latter-Day Pamphlets,' which it immediately preceded, and which resemble it most of all the published works. . . . Abundant strokes of the writer's cunning are to be found,—little vignettes of social or personal portraiture, even now and then a landscape or two."—Sat. Rev., liv. 87.

"A certain exaggeration of Carlyle's qualities is the note of this book. He went to Ireland in July, 1849, when he was more than usually sick with poverty and discontent; and the effects of the double sickness are visible on every page of the account of his visit, which, we may add, he never meant to publish in its present form. . . . And yet what pictorial power there is in the book! It is a mere mass of rough notes, it notices only the bad side of things, but when it is read you have of that bad side an indelible impression. The squalor and the misery, the suffering and the faults, of Ireland, are graven, as it were, into the reader's mind by a pen that does not traverse only, but actually bites into it."—Spectator, lv. 867.

7. Correspondence of Thomas Carlyle and Ralph Waldo Emerson, 1834–1872. [Edited by Charles Eliot Norton.] Bost. and Lon., 1883, 2 vols. p. 8vo. Supplementary Letters, 1886.

"Not so much a correspondence in any true intellectual sense as a deliberate exchange of monologues. . . . Emerson's nature, on the whole, comes out of this correspondence the more disinterested, saner, and wiser, though not the stronger and grander, of the two."—Spectator, lvi. 386.

8. Early Letters of Thomas Carlyle. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Lon., 1886, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"The contents of these volumes would be sufficiently interesting if they were nothing more than an independent supplement to the 'History of the First Forty Years of Carlyle's Life,' which was published in 1882; but their interest is greatly enhanced by the fact that they are not so much a supplement as a contradiction. Mr. Norton is one of the many outsiders to whom 'the view of Mr. Carlyle's character presented in Mr. Froude's biography has not approved itself,' and he endeavours to correct that view by printing selections from the letters written by Carlyle himself, and addressed to him by his friends and kindred, which have been placed in his hands by Mrs. Alexander Carlyle. To copies of some, if not all, of these letters Mr. Froude had access, and Mr. Norton complains that from the documents before him he made garbled extracts, and, apparently of set purpose, omitted such portions as did not fit in with his 'view.' The charges thus brought against Mr. Froude are very grave indeed, and as in the letter which he has addressed to the Times he makes no answer to them, and declines to make any, it must be assumed that he allows judgment to go by default The gravest charges have to do with the correspondence that passed between Carlyle and his future wife before their marriage. . . . All the new light thrown on this strange business by Mr. Norton discredits Mr. Froude, and is honourable both to Carlyle and to Miss Welsh."—Ath., No. 3080.

"The opportunity now afforded under Professor Norton's editorship of reading the present instalment of Carlyle's letters offers incontestable proof of how well Carlyle himself was entitled to engage the esteem of those who really knew him the most, and who were duly fitted to receive the right impressions to be gained by a study of his wonderfully complex character."—Sat. Rev., lxii. 655.

"Mr. Froude has done his worst, or his best, and it cannot be undone. Even Mr. Eliot Norton's brilliant re-editing cannot undo it. And what is the result? Simply that we must thank either Mr. Froude or his blunder for enabling us to understand how great Carlyle really was. . . . Carlyle, as we know him now, is more real, and immeasurably more impressive, than the Carlyle we knew before. The literary small-talkers may say the idol is shattered; but those to whom Carlyle was never an idol, but an instructor and inspirer, must be glad and not sorry that he has become so real to them."—WALTER LEWIN: Acad., xxxii. 128.

10. Correspondence between Goethe and Carlyle. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Lon., 1887, p. 8vo.

"A book which brings us nearer to such a spirit as that of Carlyle, and to the greater spirit of Goethe, cannot but be precious. Yet the substance of the book is slight, and its virtue could easily be distilled into one magazine article of no considerable length. . . . Mr. C. E. Norton's work as editor is as thorough, and as nearly faultless, as such work can possibly be."—EDWARD DOWDEN: Acad., xxxi. 281.

"Besides showing us in a most interesting light a curious phase of Carlyle's intellectual growth, and differing not inharmoniously in this respect from the view of his relations with his kinsfolk, wife, and early friends, which we get elsewhere, these letters give fresh and delightful evidence of Goethe's temperament in his old age."—Ath., No. 3101.

The first collected edition of Carlyle's works was published 1857–58, 16 vols. 8vo. Library Edition, and General Index, Lon., 1870–82, 34 vols. 8vo. Cheap Uniform Edition, 1870, 23 vols. cr. 8vo. People's Edition, 1872, 37 vols. 12mo. Index to the same, 1874. The immediate sale of this edition is said to have amounted to 90,000 vols. For bibliographies see GARNET, R., and SHEPHERD, R. H.

"He alone has associated the life of work with all that in former days men have associated exclusively with the life of arms. Carlyle hated political economy, and had but scant reverence for all that it implied. His words were steeped in the richest dyes of poetry; on every page is the vividness, the colouring, of romance. But on almost every page also is the appeal which, till he wrote, men only knew in the dialect of prose. He spoke the word for our age, but he spoke it in a language for which, except from him, we must turn to the past. He brought the wealth of feudal and chivalric life to enrich the sermon of the nineteenth century. He set before the toiler of to-day, amid the dust and fog of a prosaic age, the glowing ideal that seemed lost with those vanished ages. He set to music a lesson which, except from him, was associated only with the multiplication-table. Surely we need no other explanation of the vast hold on his generation which has been revealed by his death."—Spectator, liv. 1437.

"Great and deathless writer as he was, he will be honoured by posterity for his influence on human life, rather than for his supremacy as a literary artist. 'The way to test how much he has left his country,' says a great writer of another country, 'were to consider, or try to consider, for a moment, the array of British thought, the resultant ensemble of the last fifty years, as existing to-day, but with Carlyle left out. It would be like an army with no artillery.' The true legend for his monument is the dying witness of John Sterling: 'Towards England no man has been and done like you.'"—RICHARD GARNETT: Life of Carlyle, ("Great Writers,") 178.

"As a representative author, a literary figure, no man else will bequeath to the future more significant hints of our stormy era, its fierce paradoxes, its din, and its struggling parturition-periods, than Carlyle. . . . Rugged, mountainous, volcanic, he was himself more a French Revolution than any of his volumes."—WALT WHITMAN: Death of Carlyle, in Essays from The Critic, 31.

"In his clearer moments, when he lays aside his wrath and addresses himself to his nobler work of edifying exhortation, he commands a lofty soul-piercing language, which seems to extinguish all ignoble desires and call forth their opposites by a sort of celestial affinity. . . . His literary faculty, if not perfect,—very few are perfect.—was extraordinary and magnificent in the extreme. His supreme gift is his penetrating imagination, of seeing as it were into the heart of things in a moment, and reproducing them in words which it is impossible to forget. . . . In this respect he well deserves the epithet of poet, much more than many metrical and musical persons. . . . And he sees so much and so well outside himself because he has so much inside, because, by his own richness of thought and feeling, he comes ready prepared to observe, to note, to recognize things when they present themselves. . . . Carlyle's depth of insight into character was owing to the depth and capacity of his own nature. He had lived the lives of a dozen men before he put pen to paper, by reason of the passions with which he had become intimate in his own breast. In the next place, his hard peasant life, his education in the school of poverty, had made him acquainted with fact at first hand. He had not been shielded, like the unfortunate rich, from wholesome collision with realities. . . . The combined result of his natural endowment and his stimulating training was to make him the most figurative and imaginative prose writer in our language. All nature seems under his sway for colours and image,—seems to offer him, as it were, the right suggestive thing to express his thought."—JAMES COTTER MORISON: Macmillan's Magazine, xlvii. 200–212.

Carlyle, Thomas, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1803–1855, b. at King's Grange, Kirkcudbright, and educated at Annan Academy in company with Edward Irving. Carnegie, Andrew, b. 1835, at Dunfermline, Scotland; removed with his family to the United States in 1845, and has since resided in Pittsburgh, Pa., where he holds a prominent position among business men, as the principal owner of steel and iron works said to be the largest in the world. 1. An American Four-in-Hand in Britain, N. York and Lon., 1883, 8vo; new ed., 1888.

"This volume, which does not contain a single dull or unreadable page, is the record of a delightful coaching journey from Brighton to Inverness, undertaken by the writer and a party of American friends."—Spectator, lvi. 1224.

2. Round the World, N. York and Lon., 1884, 8vo; new ed., 1888.

"Though his work is fully entitled to its title, 'Round the World,' yet, from reading it, it would appear that 'the round world' is, in fact, British. . . . Nearly every page of the book is worth reading, for the new way of putting facts,—even when the facts themselves are not new,—and also for the shrewdness and freshness of the reflections which they suggest."—Spectator, lvii. 1114.

"Fresh, unstilted, full of jest and merriment, the narrative flows on, rippling into poetry, with here and there an eddy of political economy and criticism."—Nation, xxxviii. 494.

3. Triumphant Democracy; or, Fifty Years' March of the Republic, N. York and Lon., 1886, 8vo; 8th ed., 1888. 40,000 copies are said to have been sold in England in 1886–87.

"He is an undisguised worshipper of material success, and delights in big figures. He loves to tell how small things were fifty years ago, and into what splendor they have since blazed out. . . . 'Spreadeagleism' used to be considered as a specialty of the native American, but here is a foreigner who out-Herods Herod. And yet, so far as the material side is concerned, there is perhaps hardly a word which passes the truth. It is only when it is placed before us in this vivid way that we realize the stupendous development."—Nation, xlii. 472.

"Much as the American eagle and the British lion may grate on the ordinary reader, there is no doubt that Mr. Carnegie has provided a most readable summary of the present condition of the United States, and some striking instances and reflections on the superiority of democratic institutions."—Spectator, lix. 724.

"As a plea for democracy, the book is an extreme example of failure, for Mr. Carnegie understands neither what a democracy is nor on what conditions its existence depends."—Acad., xxx. 83.

"If Lord Southesk has not added much to our knowledge, he has succeeded in giving a lively picture of a curious region. In case this inducement to read his book should not be sufficient, he has added a rather incongruous appendix containing the meditations upon Shakespeare which occurred to him during his journey. The remarks upon Hamlet approach the dimensions of an essay. We cannot discuss the soundness of his conclusions here; but if any Shakespearian scholar should search in so unlikely a place for a bit of literary criticism, he will be repaid for his trouble."—*Sat. Carpenter, William, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1797–1874, was the son of a tradesman in London, and was apprenticed at an early age to a bookseller. He educated himself, learning several languages and devoting himself to Biblical studies. He was also strongly interested in political reform, and edited various periodicals. In 1831 he was tried and imprisoned for refusing to pay the stamp duty levied on newspapers for a periodical publication entitled Political Letters. Carpenter, William Benjamin, M.D., F.R.S., LL.D., C.B., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1813–1885, eldest son of Lant Carpenter; became Fullerian professor of physiology at the Royal Institution in 1844; was professor of forensic medicine at University College, London, and lecturer at the British Museum and at the London Hospital. In 1856, on being appointed registrar of the University of London, he resigned his lectureships, and thenceforward was the chief worker in the great development of that university till his resignation in 1879. He contributed extensively to the Proceedings of scientific societies, to cyclopædias, and to periodical literature. 1. Popular Cyclopædia of Natural Science, Lon., 1841–44, 5 vols. 8vo. 2. "Dr. Carpenter has collected in this volume the researches and systematic thought of many years on the relations between the mind and its organism, and on the application of the conclusions arrived at to the best training of the mind for the purpose of the proper use of its organism, and of the best training of the organism to make it a suitable instrument for the mind. The result is a book full of valuable facts, and of theories sometimes certainly true, sometimes disputable, sometimes in our opinion erroneous, but always worth attentive consideration. . . . Dr. Carpenter grasps the broad distinction between the mental constitution imposed upon us, and the modifications of it which we make for ourselves, most vigorously, and the importance he attaches to it runs through the whole volume, and may be said almost to constitute its value."—Spectator, xlvii. 884.

"No great discovery illustrates the name of Dr. Carpenter, but greatness may be achieved in more ways than one. By his almost unaided efforts he lifted up the whole scientific education of this country, and he did more than any man of his generation to bring biological science home to the minds of students and teachers alike."—Spectator, lxi. 1732.

The Hundred of Launditch and Deanery of Brisley, in the County of Norfolk: Evidences and Topographical Notes from Public Records, Heralds' Visitations, Wills, Court Rolls, Old Charters, Parish Registers, Town Books, and other Private Sources, digested and arranged as Materials for Parochial, Manorial, and Family History, Norwich, 1879, 3 parts.

"Deserves to rank among the most important contributions to local history which have ever been printed; and indeed it must be regarded as something more. It is a vast storehouse of curious and erudite learning, such as only a born antiquary could have accumulated during a long life of intelligent and minute study. . . . Incidental illustrations of most points in English history are to be found on almost every other page. His method is novel and suggestive."—Ath., No. 2682.

Casey, Miss Elizabeth, ("E. Owens Blackburne," pseud.,) b. 1848, at Slane, County Meath, Ireland. When about eleven years old she became blind, but her sight was restored by an operation at the age of eighteen; she then began a course of study, and at the examination for women at Trinity College, Dublin, took the first medal and a certificate. She contributed some verse to a Dublin paper, and in 1874 removed to London, where she has contributed to a number of magazines. 1. A Woman Scorned: a Novel, Lon., 1876, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 2. The Way Women Love, Lon., 1877, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 3. Illustrious Irishwomen: being Memoirs of some of the Most Noted Irishwomen from the Earliest Ages to the Present Century, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Of the personages whose lives are related in this book it must be said that several are not 'Irishwomen,' and that few are really 'illustrious.' . . . Now and then 'notorious,' and even 'infamous,' would have been far more applicable, while certain ladies to whom the biographer calls attention can only be described as 'obscure.' . . . It is fair to say, however, that 'Illustrious Irishwomen' is amusing reading enough."—Acad., xii. 444.

"In the author of this book is found the ritualist in the true sense of the term; and in his patient research, his careful comparison of varying uses and gradually developing rites, his abundant collation and citation of ecclesiastical authorities on the most minute points of detail, may be read an instructive commentary—however unintentional—upon the loose and ill-informed chatter on such subjects, from whichever side proceeding, with which our own times have become familiar to weariness."—*Sat. Chambers, Robert, LL.D., [ante, vol. i., CHAMBERS, WILLIAM and ROBERT, add.,] 1802–1871, so closely associated during his lifetime, both as publisher and author, with his brother William, has a posthumous reputation all his own, as the author of Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation, published anonymously in 1844. The secret of the authorship was kept very closely, in accordance with a rule made by the brothers to "avoid as far as possible mixing themselves up with debatable questions in politics and theology." The proofs of the book were sent to Mr. Alexander Ireland, of Manchester, and forwarded by him under fresh covers to the author. The work was attributed to different persons, but as early as 1854 the conjectures had already settled upon Robert Chambers. The questions raised in Vestiges of Creation were fiercely debated for some years; it was generally regarded as an attack on orthodoxy. The author, however, himself a religious man, had regarded the matter as a purely scientific one. 1. History of the British Empire. 2. Chambers, William, [ante, vol. i.,] 1800–1883, head of the publishing house of W. and R. Chambers, apart from the literary work in which he was engaged singly or with his brother, is remembered for his public labors on behalf of the city of Edinburgh, of which he was for a time lord provost, and where he restored at his own expense the church of St. Giles, and was active in promoting improvements which materially decreased the death-rate of the city. He was offered a baronetage in 1883, but did not live to receive it. He published, in addition to works mentioned ante, vol. i.: 1. A History of the Gipsies, Edin., 1822. 2. "The plan of the work deserves praise and its execution is, on the whole, commendable. . . . It is a matter of course in a compilation so comprehensive and complex as this is . . . that many mistakes should present themselves. . . . Our wonder is that they are not much more numerous, for the pages are crammed with minute particulars, to gather which, even without critical weighing of authorities one against the other, must have been a work of stupendous labour."—Ath., No. 3192.

"The little story is written in a style somewhat too luxuriant, and at the same time too frank for American taste. . . . The author's literary style is not good; . . . but as for the general tone of the book there is nothing particularly dreadful to find fault with. . . . The book has one decided merit: it shows a vigorous appreciation of a piece of character,—a passionate young woman who cannot make up her mind between her lover and her dead husband whom she adored."—Ath., No. 3203.

Chesney, Charles Cornwallis, 1826–1876, b. near Kilkeel, in Ireland; son of an East India artillery captain, and nephew of General Francis Rawdon Chesney, educated at the military academy at Woolwich, and entered the Royal Engineers as sub-lieutenant in 1845. He served in Ireland and Bermuda, and was ordered to New Zealand in 1854, but his delicate health obliged him two years later to return to England. He was appointed professor of military history at the Royal Military Staff College at Sandhurst, and was soon recognized as the best military critic of his day, his Waterloo Lectures being adopted as a text-book in French and German as well as English military schools. He served on important military commissions, became lieutenant-colonel in 1868, and brevet colonel in 1873, with the command of the home district of the Royal Engineers. 1. "The work is extremely valuable, but, as it bears everywhere the impress of the naked truth, it is intensely unflattering to the national vanity of both French and English. Romantic stories concerning the campaign, which have hitherto passed current with all the air of military authority, are ruthlessly dissected, the one-sided praise which has been indiscriminately heaped on Napoleon and Wellington by their own admirers is considerably modified, and the real importance of the Prussian intervention in the final action is fairly and honestly shown."—*Sat. 5. The Study of Military Science, Lon., 1871, 8vo. 6. Essays in Modern Military Biography, Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"The reader, of whatever profession, who can appreciate an uncommonly clear, refined, and forcible style will find his taste amply gratified in the perusal of these essays. The subjects, too, are of a striking kind, and the biographical character of the volume imparts unity to scenes and events which occupy considerable space in the history of nations. But their chief value is for the military student. . . . Whether illustrating an epoch from the personal experience of a minor actor in the scenes depicted, such as De Fezensac and Brandt, or presenting a leader in the light of his own achievements, as in the essays on Lee, and Grant, and 'Chinese Gordon,' he fails not to give us new and faithful impressions."—*Sat. Chesney, Francis Rawdon, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1789–1872, b. in County Down, Ireland; was gazetted to the Royal Artillery at the age of sixteen, and attained the rank of lieutenant-general, but never had an opportunity of serving in the field. In 1831, 1835–37, and 1856, he made expeditions through Syria and the Euphrates valley, with the view of opening a new route to India. For biog., see Chesney, Mrs. Louisa, infra. Narrative of the Euphrates Expedition, carried on by order of the British Government during the Years 1835, 1836, and 1837, Lon., 1868, 8vo.

"The present volume is not the most important which General Chesney has published as the fruit of his survey. . . . The volume now before us only sums up the record by showing the personal labour with which the results attained were won. . . . It is agreeably written, full of striking incidents, and has novelty enough to float any book of travels, though written so long after the event."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 491.

Chesney, George Tomkyns, C.B., C.S.I., b. 1830, brother of Charles Cornwallis Chesney, supra; was educated at Woolwich, and joined the Bengal Engineers in 1848. He served through the siege of Delhi, where he was twice wounded, and attained the rank of lieutenant-general in 1885. He was president of the Royal Indian Engineering College 1870–80, secretary to the military department of the government of India 1880–85, and since 1886 has been a member of the council of the governor-general. 1. Indian Polity: a View of the System of Administration in India, Lon., 1868, 8vo; 2d ed., 1870.

"In the compass of one moderate-sized volume Major Chesney gives an exhaustive account of the manner in which India is governed, and offers certain suggestions for the improvement of the existing system."—Sat. Rev., xxvi. 370.

(A narrative of an imaginary invasion and conquest of England by a foreign army, designed to call attention to the need of measures for the national defence. It was originally published in Blackwood's Magazine for May, 1871, of which several extra editions were called for. The pamphlet had also a large sale, and gave rise to many others, chiefly in reply.) 3. A True Reformer, Edin. and Lon., 1873, 3 vols. p. 8vo. Anon. (Originally published in Blackwood's Magazine. This is also ascribed to Francis Rawdon Chesney.) 4. The Dilemma. By the Author of "The Battle of Dorking." Edin. and Lon., 1876, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"The whole of this story is so connected with the hopes and adventures of a single person as to seem nothing beyond the natural development of a romance, while it really gives us the typical features of a great historical era, [that of the Indian Mutiny.]"—Spectator, xlix. 499.

"The modest dimensions of the volume, the interesting nature of its contents, and the literary skill shown in its production will secure for it an exceptionally favourable verdict."—Spectator, lviii. 1742.

"This biography has certainly one merit which every biography has not. It gives the character of the man with all its angles and all its shades as well as its brighter colours. The truthfulness and honesty, the unwavering religious faith, the pluck and perseverance, the self-reliance and vigour, the impatience and occasional irritability, of the man, are well brought out."—*Sat. Poems of Comfort and Sorrow; new ed., N. York, 1865, 16mo. 4. English and Scottish Popular Ballads, (ed. de luxe,) to be completed in eight parts. Parts I.–V. Bost., 1883–88, 4to.

"As time advances, the merits of this great collection are coming more and more to be known and recognized. Unless new sources of traditional ballad literature are brought to light,—which is not a thing to be expected, and hardly to be imagined,—the present work will remain for all time the final one upon the subject."—Nation, xliv. 325.

"I have never seen more conscientious and better work in my life than Prof. Child's. The book is an honour to its editor, an American. It ought to find its way into every real English library, and it will prove a mine of sterling ore to every student who digs into it."—F. J. FURNIVALL: Acad., xxviii. 195.

"Professor Child is building himself a monument much more durable than bronze. His edition of the English and Scottish Ballads . . . is an example to all editors, a delight of all ballad-loving men, and an honour to the Riverside Press."—Sat. Rev., lxiii. 233.

Childers, Rev. Charles, M.A., graduated at Oxford 1829; ordained 1830; rector of Mursley 1831–33; vicar of Cautley, Yorkshire, 1833–43; chaplain at Nice, 1843–84, and canon of Gibraltar 1866; rector of Arm-thorpe, Yorkshire, 1884–88. Sermons preached at Nice between the Years 1843 and 1851, Lon., 1851, 12mo.

Childers, Robert Cæsar, 1838–1876, son of Rev. Charles Childers, supra; entered the Ceylon civil service in 1860; acted for three years as private secretary to the governor of the island, and was for a short time office assistant to the government agent in Kandy, but in 1864 was compelled by ill health to return to England. He had devoted much time to linguistic studies, and had begun the study of Pali under a learned Buddhist. In 1869 he published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society the Pali text of the Khuddaka Pa'tha, with English translations and notes, which was the first Pali text printed in England. In 1872 he was appointed sub-librarian at the India Office, and in 1873 was made professor of Pali and Buddhist literature at University College, London. He contributed papers to the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. A Dictionary of the Pâli Language, Lon., 1872–75, 2 vols. 4to.

"The publication of this work removes a reproach which has long rested on Oriental scholarship. . . . The first great practical value of Professor Childers's Dictionary is that the study of Pâli can now be taken up and pursued without a previous knowledge of Sanskrit."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 145.

His [the author's] wish has evidently been to furnish a solid contribution to the history of learning and letters; and as such his volume seems to us likely to survive, even apart from the value it will possess for the fraternity of bibliographers and bibliophiles."—*Sat. "Mr. Christie has undertaken the justification of one whose brilliant powers no one denies, but who is commonly held to have abused them for the basest of purposes. . . . He does not set up the subject of his biography as a paragon of unusual virtue; he is satisfied with trying to show that the worst crimes laid to his charge are certainly false, and that there is something to be said for most of the doubtful parts of his actions. . . . He asks us to believe that Shaftesbury was not the double-dyed villain that he appears in the pages of Lord Macaulay and Lord Campbell. . . . Mr. Christie has been more successful in clearing Shaftesbury of great crimes than in giving a favourable impression of his general political conduct."—Sat. Rev., xxxii. 308, 339. "His sons have supplemented this work by an equally large volume of memoirs, which is, fortunately, of such a character that it can be read with pleasure and profit by laymen as well as experts. They have wisely allowed their father to tell as much of his story as possible by extracts from his letters; not less wisely have they intrusted to competent hands the task of summing up his professional and scientific work in special chapters. . . . The impression that remains after reading these two volumes is very well expressed by the phrase in which Christison's most intimate friend, John Brown, described him,—Ultimus Romanorum."—Spectator, lix. 1485.

"He generalizes freely, but his generalizations are guarded and qualified so carefully that the untrained mind may easily fail to grasp these; the charm of his style lies in its sweetness, its subtlety, its singular flexibility in expressing the many shades of one idea, rather than in the bold and forcible presentation of views that are easy to catch and not difficult to hold. . . . He represents national character by means of types and specimens: thus the Greeks stand for the European races belonging to the Eastern Church, and the Italians and French for the Southern or so-called Latin races."—*Sat. "It contains not only a large amount of matter which will be surprisingly new and curious to the average American reader, . . . but also a great deal that will be read with pleasure and found instructive by those familiar with the principal works on the Balkan Peninsula and its history. The author, it is true, is himself totally unfamiliar with some of the best writers on the various topics of his enquiry, having only English books, including a few translations, before him. . . . But he has made good use of the sources of information accessible to him; . . . and the varied combination of sketches and extracts which he presents to us reflects equal credit on his selection of guides and themes, on his diligence in research, and care in elaboration."—Nation, xxviii. 17.

"Admirable in intention, kind in temper, candid in spirit, earnest in purpose, this volume occupies a place in theological literature which ought to have been filled before, but which until now has remained empty. . . . The government of the American Unitarian Association, by the hand of Dr. Clarke, makes an honest attempt to find and to state the truth contained in the doctrines of their opponents. . . . He has the requisite erudition and the necessary familiarity with all the lines of thought. His mind is comprehensive, systematic, and exact; his judgment is just. . . . But for an occasional positiveness, verging on dogmatism, an absence here and there of philosophical perception, and an artificial cast in its logic, we should say that the theme was handled as well as we have a right to expect from anybody."—Nation, iii. 228.

Written and Compiled by Himself. In 2 vols. Vol. i., Cin., 1886, 8vo.

"Every school-boy knows the names of Seward, Grant, Lincoln, and John Brown; but alas that he should be ignorant, till he reads this autobiography, that Cassius Clay 'did more than any man to overthrow slavery.' . . . It is not part of our intention to belittle Mr. Clay's services in behalf of emancipation, beginning with the liberation of his own slaves. They were heroic, and will not be forgotten. . . . The account of his life in Russia is decidedly the most entertaining part of his rambling narrative, and makes one long for the view of him which some one of his diplomatic colleagues may have preserved in his diary or his private letters. . . . After all, one closes this book with kindly feelings towards the much-daring and much-suffering author,—magnanimous, we are convinced, and not mercenary, and with a love of nature that now and then tinges his pages with the most unexpected charm.' —Nation, xliii. 271.

Clemens, Samuel Langhorne, ("Mark Twain,") [ante, vol. iii., TWAIN, MARK, add.,] b. 1835, at Florida, Monroe Co., Mo., was apprenticed to a printer at the age of thirteen, and, after working at that trade in different cities, became a pilot on the Mississippi river steamboats in 1851. Ten years later he went to Nevada, where he edited a paper, and he subsequently joined with Bret Harte in editing The Californian, and began to deliver humorous lectures with great success. In 1872 he settled in Hartford, Conn., where he has since resided. In 1884 he established in New York the subscription-book-publishing house of C. L. Webster & Co., which published General Grant's "Memoirs of the Civil War." Mr. Clemens is said to have taken the pseudonyme by which he is so universally known from the recollection of his experience as a pilot, the phrase "mark twain"—i.e., "mark two fathoms"—being used in taking soundings on the Mississippi. He has been a frequent contributor to periodicals, and his story The Gilded Age, written in conjunction with Charles Dudley Warner, had great success as a play, with John T. Raymond as Col. Sellers. The following list of his works includes two mentioned ante, vol. iii.: 1. The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County. Edited by J. Paul. N. York, 1867, 16mo. 2. The Innocents Abroad; or, The New Pilgrim's Progress: being some Account of the Steamship Quaker City's Pleasure Excursion to Europe and the Holy Land. Illust. Hartford, 1869, 8vo. (Of this book 125,000 copies are said to have been sold in three years.)

"All the prominent characteristics of our peculiar school of humorists—their audacity, their extravagance and exaggeration—Mr. Clemens displays in fulness in the course of his ramblings, and he has some merits which belong to his individual self, and which make him a very agreeable companion when he is at ease and natural—which is not always; for as he pads, so, we must make free to tell him, does he sometimes grimace, and is professionally a humorist as he was professionally a book-maker."—Nation, lx. 194.

With more than 300 Illustrations. Bost., 1883, 8vo.

"'Life on the Mississippi' is only secondarily the work of a funny man. Primarily it is descriptive and historical work, by an ex-pilot of the old Mississippi sort. . . . The book will be found, as a record of a past phase of American life, both entertaining and valuable."—Nation, xxxvii. 192.

"Mr. Clemens's humor is of such a universal and comprehensive character that it is very difficult to say in what its peculiarity consists. His eminent forerunner, Artemus Ward, had a certain literary cachet which Mr. Clemens lacks. His sketches were sketches of American life and manners, grotesque and absurd as you please, but still having a distinctly national flavor. It is hardly possible to say that Artemus Ward described life as he found it; but there was a definite literary relation between life as he saw it around him and what he wrote, which everybody recognized in his books. Mr. Clemens's humor, on the other hand, is American enough, but his inventions, which he uses as a vehicle for it, are of no nationality. There is a kind of monstrosity about them which we remember in no other writer,—a wild extravagance which is not simply that of exaggeration."—Nation, xxxv. 119.

"Mark Twain is American pure and simple. To the eastern mother-land he owes but the rudiments, the groundwork, already archaic and obsolete to him, of the speech he has to write; in his turn of art, his literary methods and aims, his intellectual habit and temper, he is as distinctly national as the fourth of July itself."—Ath., No. 2739.

Clifford, William Kingdon, 1845–1879, b. at Exeter, Eng.; exhibited as a child unusual precocity of mind. He was sent to school in Exeter, and in 1860 to King's College, London, where he distinguished himself in classical as well as in mathematical studies. In 1863 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, where his extraordinary mathematical powers were at once recognized. He displayed athletic as well as intellectual prowess, and, with a constitution and build naturally slight, was active to excess in gymnastic exercises. He was made a Fellow of Trinity in 1868, and in 1871 became professor of applied mathematics in University College, London. In 1874 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society. His lectures delivered before various scientific and philosophic societies 1872–75 had a marked success, being at once original and popular. The highest hopes were entertained of him in scientific circles, but his health, always delicate, broke down under the severe physical and intellectual strain to which, in his eager activity, he had subjected it, and he died of consumption at Madeira. 1. Elements of Dynamic: an Introduction to the Study of Motion and Rest in Solid and Fluid Bodies, Lon., 1878, 8vo.

"The most cursory glance at the work is enough to show us that we have entered upon a new era of dynamical teaching."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 792.

2. Seeing and Thinking, ("Nature" Series,) Lon., 1879, p. 8vo. 3. Classification of Loci, (Philosophical Transactions,) Lon., 1879, 4to. 4. Lectures and Essays. Edited by Leslie Stephen and Frederick Pollock: with an Introduction by F. Pollock, Lon., 1879, 2 vols. 8vo.

"A collection of such of his papers and lectures as were addressed to non-technical audiences. . . . Clifford intended to remodel them into a definite statement of his views on philosophical and other subjects, to be called 'The Creed of Science.' . . . The whole book is eloquent with the fervour of an enthusiast who threw himself into the pursuit of truth in the firm belief that therein lies the only hope of good for that humanity which he loved so passionately. It is an eloquence chastened by an extraordinary simplicity of style and a resolute seeking after clearness, but it is not the less effective for that."—Sat. Rev., xlviii. 240.

"In these essays there is very little appearance of scientific precision. The doctrine of Mr. Darwin is made the basis of ethics without any preliminary enquiry whether it will bear the weight imposed on it. A reflective reader will seek in vain among these papers for a clear definition of the extent and final end of action. . . . Clifford's moral teaching is not adequately reasoned out."—J. SULLY: Acad., xvii. 133.

"Never was an intenser illustration than is spread out in these pages of the chaotic state of our contemporary thinking, or a creed on the whole less fit to be proclaimed to the people as the matured and classified result of scientific thought. There are, of course, exquisitely simple and vivid statements of particular physical theories."—Nation, xxix. 312.

(Edited by Prof. Karl Pearson.)

"Its use will be found in giving the mathematician an increased interest in his own work, rather than in opening up the mysteries of that work to the outside world, though the explanations are so fundamental that the non-mathematician, if only he have good natural faculty in that line, may peruse it with advantage."—Ath., No. 3011.

"He has left his mark on contemporary English thought and sentiment, and his writings, fragmentary though they are, may probably carry some bright flashes of insight to other generations than our own."—JAMES SULLY: Acad., xvii. 134.

"As a mathematical writer Clifford was marked by a keen power of imagination, rich in its suggestions of new lines of thought and discovery: he was a standing example of the fact that the true man of science, especially the mathematician, is the man of speculation, of tested theory, of keen, albeit disciplined, imagination."—LESLIE STEPHEN: *Dict. of Nat. Clissold, Rev. Augustus, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1797?–1882, brother of Henry Clissold, infra, was educated at Oxford, ordained in 1823, and made curate of Stoke Newington. Enthusiasm for the writings of Swedenborg led him about 1840 to give up his clerical office and to devote himself to the translation and spread of Swedenborg's works. He was connected with the Swedenborg Association and Swedenborg Society, which he aided largely with money, translated and printed at his own expense some of Swedenborg's works, and wrote numerous pamphlets and volumes illustrating the doctrine of the New Church. The following list includes two or three works mentioned ante, vol. i.: 1. The Practical Nature of the Doctrines and Alleged Revelations contained in the Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, in a Letter to the Archbishop of Dublin, Lon., 1838, 8vo; 2d ed., entitled Practical Nature of the Theological Writings, &c., Lon., 1860. 2. Illustrations of the End of the Church, as predicted in Matthew xxiv., Lon., 1841, 8vo. 3. A Letter to the Rev. J. Bonwell, of Preston, upon the Subject of his Sermon on the Perishing in the Gainsaying of Core, Lon., 1843, 8vo. 4. The New Church: addressed to the Inhabitants of Preston, Lon., 1843, 8vo. 5. A Review of the Principles of Apocalyptic Interpretation, Lon., 1845, 3 vols. 8vo. 6. (Trans.) Swedenborg's Principia Rerum Naturalium, Lon., 1845–46, 2 vols. 8vo. 7. (Trans.) The Economy of the Animal Kingdom considered Anatomically, Physically, and Philosophically, by Emanuel Swedenborg. Ed. by J. J. G. Wilkinson. Lon., 1846, 2 vols. 8vo. 8. A Reply to the Remarks emanating from St. Mary's College, Oscott, on Noble's Appeal in Behalf of the Doctrines of Swedenborg, Lon., 1849, 8vo. 9. The Spiritual Exposition of the Apocalypse, as derived from the Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, Lon., 1851, 4 vols. 8vo. 10. A Letter to the Rev. the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford on the Present State of Theology in the Universities and the Church of England, and on the Causes of Existing Scepticism and Infidelity. By Clericus. Oxf., 1856. 11. Swedenborg's Writings and Catholic Teaching: in Answer to a Series of Articles on the Swedenborgians, by the Vicar of Frome-Selwood, [Rev. William James Early Bennett,] in "The Old Church Porch," Lon., 1858, 8vo; 3d ed., 1881. 12. Inspiration and Interpretation: being a Reply to Seven Sermons by J. W. Burgon, Oxf, 1861–64, 7 parts, 12mo. 13. Swedenborg and his Modern Critics: with Some Remarks upon the Last Times, Lon., 1866, 8vo. 14. The Reunion of Christendom, Lon., 1866, 8vo. 15. Clive, Mrs. Caroline, 1801–1873, b. in London, was the daughter of Edmund Mersey-Wigley, of Shakenhurst, Worcestershire, and in 1840 was married to Rev. Archer Clive, supra. Mrs. Clive was a confirmed invalid for some years previous to her death, which was the result of an accident, her dress having caught fire while she was writing in her boudoir at Whitfield, Herefordshire. Her works were all published anonymously. 1. IX Poems. By V. Lon., 1840, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1841. (This volume attracted much notice, and was very favorably reviewed in the Quarterly. The second edition includes nine additional poems.) 2. I Watched the Heavens: a Poem. By V. Lon., 1842, p. 8vo. (The first canto of an unfinished poem.) 3. The Queen's Ball: a Poem. By V. Lon., 1847, p. 8vo. 4. The Valley of the Rea: a Poem. By V. Lon., 1851, p. 8vo. 5. The Morlas: a Poem. By V. Lon., 1853, p. 8vo. 6. Paul Ferroll: a Tale. By the Author of "IX Poems," by V. Lon., 1855, p. 8vo. (The fourth edition contains a concluding chapter, bringing the story down to the death of Paul Ferroll.)

"'Paul Ferroll,' although a condensed, vigorous, and interesting story, is rather an evidence of the writer's ability than absolutely excellent in itself. . . . The incidents in the book are extremely well managed; we cannot say so much for the delineation of character. Paul Ferroll himself is, in fact, the only full-length figure: the other characters are merely accessories, supplying the requisite dramatic situations."—Ath., No. 1451.

7. Poems. By the Author of "Paul Ferroll." Including a New Edition of "IX Poems," by V.: with Former and Recent Editions. Lon., 1856, 8vo. (Some of the earlier poems are omitted in this edition.) 8. Year after Year. By the Author of "Paul Ferroll" and "IX Poems." Lon., 1858, 12mo. 9. Why Paul Ferroll Killed his Wife, Lon., 1860, 12mo; new ed., 1864. (The preface contains a defence of "Paul Ferroll" against some strictures in the Edinburgh Review.)

"A book which, even if it be not destined to be popular, will not be easily forgotten nor lightly esteemed by some of those into whose hands it falls. . . . It is not so much a picture of life as a 'study' from life, and to appreciate the study one must seize the key to it, and place oneself at the point of view from which the scene is taken."—Sat. Rev., x. 838.

10. John Greswold. By the Author of "Paul Ferroll." Lon., 1864, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"'John Greswold' is not only a good book, but it is one whose merits are even less easily pointed out than those of most good books. . . . No doubt there is a certain charm in the style. . . . Perhaps the secret of 'John Greswold' is exceeding simplicity of incident, combined with the most careful treatment of details. . . . The whole picture is natural and unartificial in the highest degree."—Sat. Rev., xvii. 692.

Clough, Arthur Hugh, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1819–1861, b. at Liverpool; educated at Rugby, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated 1841; was elected Fellow and tutor of Oriel College, but, having changed his religious views, resigned these positions in 1848; was head-master of University Hall, London, from 1849 till 1852, when he visited America and resided for some months in Boston; on his return to England he was appointed to a place in the Education Office, but in 1859 his health gave way, and he went abroad, visiting Greece, Spain, and Italy, where he died. His name is probably familiar to many who have never read his poems, from the mention of him in the writings and biographies of the time, and the high estimation in which he was held by M. Arnold, Emerson, and others. His "Bothie of Toper-na-Fuosich," (afterwards changed to "Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich,") and his revised edition of Dryden's translation of Plutarch's Lives, are mentioned ante, vol. i.; and a volume of poems which he published in conjunction with Thomas Burbidge is mentioned under the name of the latter, supra. "His chief aim has been to show that, in at least a great many cases, the tale which has been rendered familiar by oral tradition to successive generations of European peasants has existed for centuries in Oriental literature. About his success in this respect there can be but little doubt, even among readers who may be sceptical with regard to the exclusively Eastern origin of the great mass of Western popular tales. . . . Cobbe, Miss Frances Power, b. 1828, in the county of Dublin, Ireland, and educated at Brighton, Eng. After a visit to Italy and the East, she resided for some years at Bristol with Mary Carpenter, supra, whom she assisted in her reformatory and ragged schools, and later she interested herself in plans for helping young servant-girls and for the relief of destitute incurables. Her attention had been early directed to theological reading, and she was deeply impressed with the writings of Theodore Parker, with whom she opened a correspondence which led to a warm friendship. She has brought out an edition of his works in England, and may be regarded as an exponent of his line of thought. On returning from Italy Miss Cobbe settled in London, where she has been known as an earnest writer and practical worker in matters relating to the higher education and political enfranchisement of women, and the suppression of vivisection. She has been a constant contributor to the reviews and other periodicals. She has lately lived in retirement in Wales. 1. "Only introduces us to some rather rhetorical lucubrations on the immortality of the soul, varied by a few not particularly original speculations regarding the conditions of the possible life of the future, and followed by an essay on the natural history of the emotion of sympathy and the counter-emotion, for which Miss Cobbe has devised the term 'Heteropathy.'"—Ath., No. 2457.

"There is much in this book which is true and able. . . . "This is, in many respects, the most telling of Miss Cobbe's books, full of life, spirit, and aggressiveness. . . . The object of these admirable lectures is . . . to enforce on women who are growing up to the greater freedom of modern ideas as to their functions and duties that they must not leave behind them the old moral ideal of women, but, on the contrary, struggle more sedulously to preserve it, amid the new temptations and new difficulties of their enlarged conceptions of right and duty."—Spectator, liv. 87.

28. The Peak in Darien: with some other Inquiries touching Concerns of the Soul and the Body, Lon., 1882, p. 8vo.

"'The Peak in Darien' is an essay on 'the riddle of death,' Miss Cobbe endeavouring to show, not without very tangible success, that even earthly watchers who do not accept the evidence for Christ's revelation on the subject not unfrequently catch a glimpse of the other side of the gulf as they gaze at those who are passing from our side to theirs."—Spectator, lv. 1083.

"Sir Robert Peel particularly urged a correspondent to attempt an 'historical account of the villas in the neighbourhood of London.' He especially referred to those which were mentioned in what he called 'Horace Walpole's song about Strawberry Hill;' but, he added, there were 'a hundred others with very curious anecdotes of local and personal history connected with them,' and he wound up by saying, 'the county histories would furnish a substratum for the work, but everything would depend upon the liveliness and accuracy of the details.' Such a work as is here sketched out, executed in a manner that would have satisfied the sketcher, would be one of the most delightful volumes that ever charmed mankind. . . . We must thank Mr. Cobbett for giving us a book which, if not so good as it ought to be, is at least one step in advance of its predecessors."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 378.

Codrington, Rev. Robert Henry, D.D., graduated at Wadham College, Oxford, 1852, and elected a Fellow 1855; ordained 1856; missionary in Melanesia; vicar of Wadhurst since 1887; canon residentiary and prebendary of Chichester Cathedral 1888. The Melanesian Languages, Oxf., 1885, 8vo.

"The expectations raised by a preliminary paper recently read before the Anthropological Institute have been amply realized by Mr. Codrington's present work, which for the first time places the comparative study of the Melanesian tongues on a solid foundation. . . . It consists of two essentially distinct parts,—a general survey of all the Oceanic tongues constituting the so-called Malayo-Polynesian family, and a separate study of thirty-five more or less typical languages current in the New Hebrides . . . and other Melanesian insular groups. The results of this searching investigation are in some respects so startling that they will scarcely meet with universal assent without further research."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 58.

"The book is written with all the ripe knowledge of one who has lived and taught for years among the natives of Melanesia, and it offers a welcome contribution to the solution of an obscure problem of scientific philology. . . . Dr. Codrington . . . seems to think that the Melanesian is racially, as well as linguistically, connected with the Polynesian and Malay; but his arguments have certainly brought no conviction to my mind, and his view is opposed to that of the most eminent ethnologists. It is only incidentally, however, that he glances at the question of race. His book is concerned, not with ethnology, but with the Melanesian languages, a subject on which he supplies an abundance of material that makes a revision of our old opinions necessary. . . . The conclusion reached by Dr. Codrington is that the Melanesian languages have the same origin as the Malayan and Polynesian. . . . Dr. Codrington certainly seems to me to have proved the main point of his contention."—A. H. Sayce: Acad., xxviii. 429.

That Governors, Residents, Commissioners, and the whole population of a colony were ill informed, unjust, and even occasionally insane, is a proposition which Miss Colenso enunciates with graceful indifference to the balance of probability and to the comparative weight of authority."—Sat. Rev., lx. 388.

Colenso, Rt. Rev. John William, [ante, vol. ii., add.,] 1814–1883, b. at St. Austell, Cornwall, Eng. His father, a mining agent, was in straitened circumstances, and Colenso, while struggling for an education, was obliged to aid in the support of the family. He became assistant in a school at Dartmouth, and at last managed to enter Cambridge as a sizar of St. John's College, of which he became a Fellow. In 1846 he was made vicar of Forncett St. Mary, Norfolk, where he remained for seven years. In 1853 he accepted the new colonial bishopric of Natal, South Africa. Here he labored indefatigably, instructing the people, writing a grammar and dictionary of the Zulu language, and translating the New Testament and parts of the Old into that language. While thus bending his mind to this task he was led to re-examine its familiar pages for himself. The conclusions to which he came were embodied in his commentary on Romans and critical examination of the Pentateuch. The publication of these books raised a storm in England. An attempt was made by the Bishop of Cape Town to depose, and even to excommunicate, the author, but on Colenso appealing to the crown these proceedings were declared to be legally void. For biog., see Cox, Sir G. W., infra. In the following list of his works his mathematical school-books, which are mentioned generally ante, vol. i., are not included: 1. Cottage Family Prayers, Cambridge, 1846, 12mo. 2. Village Sermons, Lon., 1853, 18mo; 2d ed., 1854. 3. (Ed.) Psalms and Hymns for Use in the Church of England, 1853, 32mo. 4. (Ed.) The Communion Service, from the Book of Common Prayer: with Select Readings from the Writings of F. D. Maurice, Cambridge, 1855, 16mo. 5. An Ordination and Three Missionary Sermons, Cambridge, 1855, 12mo. 6. Ten Weeks in Natal: a Journal of a First Tour of Visitation among the Colonists and Zulu-Kaffirs of Natal, Cambridge, 1855, 8vo. 7. Two Sermons on Spiritual Eating in the Holy Eucharist, Maritzburg, 1858, 8vo. 8. An Elementary Grammar of the Zulu-Kaffir Language, Ekukanyeni, 1859, 12mo. 9. First Steps in the Zulu-Kaffir Language: an Abridgment of the Elementary Grammar of the Zulu-Kaffir Language, Ekukanyeni, 1859, 12mo. 10. (Ed.) Three Native Accounts of the Visit of the Bishop of Natal to Umpande, King of the Zulus: with Explanatory Notes and a Literal Translation, and a Glossary, Maritzburg, 1860, 12mo. 11. Zulu-English Dictionary, Pietermaritzburg, 1861, 12mo. 12. St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, newly translated and explained, Lon., 1861, cr. 8vo. 13. First Lessons in Science; designed for the Use of Children and Adult Natives; 2d ed., Natal, 1861, 2 parts, 16mo; new ed., Lon., 1877. 14. A Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury upon the Question of the Proper Treatment of Cases of Polygamy, as found already existing in Converts from Heathenism, Cambridge, 1862, 8vo. 15. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined. Part I., The Pentateuch Examined as an Historical Narrative, Lon., 1862; 5th ed., 1863. Of this volume 10,000 copies were printed. 16. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined. Part II., The Age and Authorship of the Pentateuch Considered. 1863; 3d ed. same year. 17. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined. Part III., The Book of Deuteronomy. Lon., 1863. 18. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined. Part IV., The First Eleven Chapters of Genesis Examined and Separated, with Remarks on the Creation, the Fall, and the Deluge. 1863. 19. Notes by the Bishop of Natal on an Examination of Part I. of his Work on the Pentateuch by Dr. McCaul, Lon., 1863, 8vo. 20. Letter to the Laity of the Diocese of Natal, Lon., 1864, 8vo; 2d ed. same year. 21. Remarks upon the Recent Proceedings and Charge of Robert, Bishop of Cape Town, Lon., 1864, 8vo; 2d ed. same year. 22. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined. Part V. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined. Part VI., The Later Legislation of the Pentateuch. Lon., 1871.

"The volume now before us is distinguished by the same sort of merits, and shows also, we regret to say, the same defect, as those which have preceded it,—the merits of unwearied and minute research, of fairness in dealing with opposing arguments, and kindly feelings to opponents generally, and of outspoken honesty and fearlessness of statement,—the defect of not sufficiently appreciating the importance of the historical element to religious conviction."—Spectator, xlv. 569.

28. New Bible Commentary by Bishops and other Clergy of the Anglican Church Critically Examined. Parts I.–VI. Lon., 1871–74, 8vo. 29. "Mr. Keble has been fortunate in his biographer. . . . Sir John Coleridge knew Keble probably as long and as intimately as any one. . . . He thoroughly understood and valued the real and living unity of a character which mostly revealed itself to the outer world by what seemed jerks and discordant traits. . . . Many people will of course except to the character. It is not the type likely to find favour in an age of activity, doubt, and change. But, as it was realized in Mr. Keble, there it is in Sir John Coleridge's pages, perfectly real, perfectly natural, perfectly whole and uniform."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 389.

Collier, John Payne, [ante, vol. i., add.,] d. 1883. The folio Shakespeare mentioned in vol. i., which was known as the Perkins Folio from the inscription "Tho. Perkins his Booke" on the outer cover, was presented by Collier to the Duke of Devonshire, on whose death, in 1858, it fell into the hands of his successor, who, in 1859, deposited it at the British Museum for examination. This revealed the fact that the manuscript notes were recent fabrications simulating a seventeenth-century handwriting, that they corresponded to other marginal notes made in pencil and partly rubbed out, and were themselves in some instances written first in pencil. The authenticity of the lectures published by Collier as taken from his own long-lost short-hand notes made from Coleridge's lectures was also impugned, and a genuine letter preserved at Dulwich was shown to have been cited by him with falsifications made in order to introduce Shakespeare's name. Sixteen more forgeries circulated by him were discovered at Dulwich in 1881. Collier published, in addition to works mentioned in vol. i.: 1. (Ed.) Five Miracle Plays, or Scripture Dramas, Lon., 1836, 8vo. 25 copies privately printed. 2. The Skryveners' Play: The Incredulity of St. Thomas; from a Manuscript, (Camden Soc. "To one fatal propensity Collier sacrificed an honourable fame won by genuine services to English literature. Apart from his labours on Shakespeare and the history of the drama, few have done more to rescue the works of less famous writers from undeserved oblivion. His critical judgment, however, was not always equal to his industry, and he was never a particularly accurate editor. Worse than this, the taint of suspicion necessarily rests upon all his work. . . . In literary matters he was apparently devoid of conscience."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., xi. 353.

"When one reads the long list of novels which flowed from his prolific brain-mint betwixt 1865 and 1876, the pace quickening during the last three years to two or three 'per annum,' is it to be wondered that his works of fiction are full of himself in one shape or another as the hero; that they bear the most evident marks of rapid composition; and that, as we once heard it said of them by a friendly critic, 'his plots construct themselves, and his heroes run away with him'?"—Acad., xii. 132.

Collins, William Wilkie, [ante, vol. i., add.,] d. 1889. He was a regular contributor to Household Words and All the Year Round, in which latter periodical he published his most successful novel, The Woman in White. In 1873–74 he visited the United States, and gave public readings of two of his short stories, The Frozen Deep and The Dream Woman. His first dramas, The Light-House and The Frozen Deep, were performed by Dickens and other amateurs at Tavistock House, and afterwards brought out at London theatres. Many of his novels have been dramatized, and most of them have passed through several editions, though his popularity as a writer had considerably diminished during the later years of his life. 1. "It is as a story-teller that this writer will go down to posterity, and as a story-teller his wonderful power is, we think, chiefly due to the dramatic unity which is to be traced throughout all his finer works. There is the utmost possible concentration of interest, and no irrelevant matter is allowed for a moment to intrude itself. Each work represents a design, and each character, and even each speech of the characters, assist to the fulfilment of the action whereby the design is completed."—Spectator, l. 1008.

"Mr. Wilkie Collins probably does not himself expect that any of his works will live. . . . But it is something to be facile princeps even in a transient school. . . . He has made what may be called the 'detective' novel his own, and—for comparisons are unnecessary—need fear no rival. He takes so much and such evident trouble over what he writes, and his workmanship is so good and so conscientious, that the result is always, of its kind, as good as can be got. . . . No one ever yet began one of his novels to throw it aside. It is possible that, having read one, we may not care to begin a second; but if we once begin it we shall most certainly finish it; for, although Mr. Collins has grave defects, he has no positive faults. . . . For ingenuity, for cleverness, for power of rousing curiosity and keeping interest alive, Mr. Collins stands altogether alone. The art is not a high art, perhaps; but he has mastered it, and mastered it—as his books show—by honest industry." Ath., No. 2312.

Colquhoun, Archibald Ross, member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, F.R.G.S., b. 1846, off the Cape of Good Hope, and educated in Scotland and on the continent; went to India as a civil engineer in his youth, and rose to be executive engineer of the Indian Public Works. In 1879 he was appointed secretary and second in command of the mission sent by the government of India to Siam. In 1881 he returned to England on furlough, and a few months afterwards, in company with Mr. C. Wahab, started on an expedition through Southern China and the Chinese Shan states, partly with the view of discovering a new trade-route from China down the Irrawadi. On his return he was awarded the gold medal of the R.G.S. In 1883 he visited Hong-Kong and Tonquin as correspondent to the London Times. In 1885 he was appointed deputy-commissioner of the Sagam district in Upper Burmah. 1. "He has carefully examined the various accounts that we have of this great man, and he has spared no pains in working up the materials into a whole. The sketch is readable, and in parts interesting even to those who were already well acquainted with the main facts. But greater praise than this it does not, we fear, deserve. The criticism is of a higher order, though even this . . . is scarcely worthy of the subject."—Sat. Rev., lii. 238.

"A critical monograph on Keats, in which should be distilled all the new material that, since the appearance of Lord Houghton's biography, has been furnished by the industry of poetical students, has long been a desideratum. . . . And with regard to the book before me, on every page will be found evidence of that care and that scholarly conscience for which Mr. Colvin is distinguished even among English scholars. Every kind of information from every source has been examined with an honest sagacity which nothing can escape. . . . Those who read this delightful little volume will admit that Mr. Colvin in his treatment of Keats is almost as happy as he was in his treatment of Landor."—THEODORE WATTS: Acad., xxxii. 111.

Conder, Major Claude Reignier, D.C.L., b. 1848, at Cheltenham, Eng.; son of F. R. Conder, infra, and grandson of Josiah Conder, (q. v., ante, vol. i.:) obtained by competitive examination a commission in the Royal Engineers in 1870, and in 1872 was appointed to the command of the Palestine Exploration Fund Survey, on which he was employed till the completion of the survey of Western Palestine in 1877. From 1878 until 1881 he was employed in the construction of fortifications at Edinburgh; in 1881 he was in command of the survey of Eastern Palestine, and on the work being stopped by the Turkish government in the following year he was appointed to Lord Wolseley's staff in Egypt, and he was present at the battle of Tel el Kebir. He was on the staff of Sir C. Warren in Bechuanaland in 1884, and served on this expedition as British commissioner for laying down the boundary-line of the South African Republic. Since his return to England he has been appointed to the staff of the Ordnance Survey of Great Britain. He received the Order of Medjidie in 1882. His work on the Palestine survey—drawings, plans, descriptive notes, &c.—is embodied in the volumes published for the Palestine Exploration Fund. 1. Tent-Work in Palestine: a Record of Discovery and Adventure. With Illustrations by J. D. Whymper. Lon., 1878, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1880, 1 vol. cr. 8vo; new ed., 1885.

"In the volumes now issued we have Mr. Conder's personal history of the work, telling in modest terms with how much toil, occasional hardship, and not infrequent risk to person and life, the survey was carried on. Only a limited portion of his book is devoted to the topography and archæology of the Holy City, his object being to afford a succinct and comprehensive view of the whole field of operations through the length and breadth of Palestine."—*Sat. 4. A Primer of Bible Geography, founded on the Latest Explorations, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo. 5. Syrian Stone Lore; or, The Monumental History of Palestine. Illust. Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"It is a treatise, as the writer says in his preface, on 'the ancient condition of Palestine from the earliest recorded times down to the close of the Frank dominion,' discussing the 'social condition of the inhabitants, their race-origins, languages, religions, social customs, government, art, literature, and trade.' Obviously, in a popular volume of moderate dimensions, such an extensive programme could not be exhaustively carried out; but it may be said that Captain Conder, who has enjoyed unrivalled opportunities of examining, on the spot, the archæological remains of Syria, has also diligently studied the chief literary sources of information, and has compiled a very serviceable hand-book of Syrian antiquities."—ISAAC TAYLOR: Acad., xxx. 404.

6. Altaic Hieroglyphs and Hittite Inscriptions, Lon., 1887, cr. 8vo. (In the "Quarterly Statement" of the Palestine Exploration Fund, April, 1887, Major Conder says that he desires in this volume "to restore the known sounds of the symbols to which they belong, to show that this was the Hittite language, and to put into the hands of specialists the key which will enable them to make final and complete translations of the text." In a paper read before the British Association in 1888 he adduced evidence in support of his view that the Hittite texts are written in a Mongol language akin to the ancient Akkadian.) 7. Palestine, ("The World's Great Explorers and Explorations,") Lon., 1889, cr. 8vo.

"The name of Conder will remain as indissolubly connected with the Holy Land as that of Magellaens with his Straits. In this book, which, we hasten to say, is in every respect admirable and worthy of the subject, the author gives first a short history of exploration from the beginning. . . . He then summarizes in half a dozen chapters his own survey and its principal results."—Sat. Rev., lxix. 209.

Conway, Moncure Daniel, b. 1832, in Stafford Co., Va.; graduated at Dickinson College, Pa., in 1849, and in 1850 became a Methodist minister. Having modified, however, both his religious views and the extreme Southern political tenets in which he had been brought up, he left the Methodists and entered the Divinity School at Cambridge, Mass. He then returned to Virginia; but his course in aiding a runaway slave from his native county made him the subject of threats which obliged him to leave the State. He became pastor of a Unitarian church in Washington, from which he was dismissed for some anti-slavery discourses. In 1863 he went to England and lectured there on the civil war from a Federal and anti-slavery point of view, becoming also the minister of a Unitarian society in London, a position which he occupied until 1884, when he returned to the United States. He has contributed largely to periodicals in England and America, and has been a writer for the daily press in London. 1. Tracts of To-Day, Cin., 1858. 2. The Natural History of the Devil, Cin., 1859. 3. The Rejected Stone; or, Insurrection vs. Resurrection in America. By a Native of Virginia. Bost., 1861, 12mo; 2d ed., 1862. 4. "There is much of his characteristic quality about these essays, and they are very pleasantly written; but they are of the sermon class, and represent the views of an extreme party upon topics most of which are matters of sentiment rather than of reason, of faith rather than philosophy." —Nation, xxv. 74.

14. Demonology and Devil Lore. Illust. Lon. and Edin., 1878, 2 vols. 8vo.

"For the industry and perseverance with which he has almost exhausted the subject of demonology, Mr. Moncure Conway deserves the highest praise."—Ath., No. 2672.

"Since Mr. Conway first wrote the 'Natural History of the Devil,' . . . twenty years ago, the subject has haunted him; he has explored libraries in its behalf, ransacked the British Museum, visited cathedrals; he has had the aid and counsel of men like Tylor, Lubbock, and Max Müller. . . . While his book has, to our thinking, some marked faults, it has predominant merits which do him honor and make the work a real addition to the history of human thought."—Nation, xxviii. 203.

"Mr. Conway is not, we think, fortunate in his choice of title for a work which must demand acceptance as a valuable contribution towards the early history of engraving upon wood. . . . Through no fault of the author, it must remain incomplete until it can be accompanied by illustrations."—Acad., xxvi. 275.

"He has tried to find out what manner of men these early artists were, in what sort of society they lived, whence they drew their inspirations, and what was their ideal. And it is in great measure owing to this attempt that the present volume is far more interesting and instructive than anything yet written on the subject in English."—W. H. Cooper, Thomas, [ante, vol. i., the fifth of the name there mentioned, add.,] b. 1805, at Leicester, Eng.; removed in childhood to the town of Gainesborough, where at fifteen he apprenticed himself to a shoemaker. He taught himself Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and French, and in 1829 became a school-master. He held positions on the staff of two or three county newspapers, and in 1840 settled in Leicester, and was the leader of the Chartists there in 1841. He lectured in the potteries during the riots at Leicester in 1842, was arrested on a charge of conspiracy, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. In 1848 he became an active political and historical lecturer in London. He edited a weekly penny journal called The Plain Speaker, and another sceptical periodical called Cooper's Journal. "Written to support the theory that the large Belgic population, the infinita hominum multitudo, which Cæsar found in Britain, remained with practically undiminished numbers after the Roman conquest of this island, that they thoroughly received the stamp and impress of Roman civilization, that their largely increased numbers were, again, practically undiminished by the barbarian conquests, that the barbarians adopted many of the customs which they found in the land; in short, that Roman civilization underlies Anglo-Saxon institutions, if we may use such loose and inaccurate language, and that Romanized Britain reacted upon the conquerors in a very marked and important way. . . . We quite believe . . . that he has made out a case for having the question which he puts reargued; and we are sure that his book will be read with pleasure, if not with approval, by all whose tastes and studies lead them to take an interest in the subject."—Spectator, li. 640.

"We find here discussions on the relations of animals and plants, on the influence of mind in nature, and on the origin of consciousness, with others on less recondite problems. . . . One of the most curious speculations to be found in this volume is the tracing of plant to animal life through a progressive automatism and loss of consciousness. . . . The great fault of the book is that no attempt has been made to systematize and weld together the material of which it is composed."—Nation, xliv. 121.

"It is sufficiently pleasant reading, and in every way excellent in tone. It tells all there is to tell of his active life; but it is weakest precisely where it had need to be strong. We cannot blame a lady for not dwelling on the scientific work; but, after all, that is what we should like to hear about. . . . We miss those definitions of the work, those explanations of mental processes which, after all, make up the life of a man of science."—Sat. Rev., lxvi. 472.

"His book contains a part—only a part—of a course of lectures given for the Cambridge 'University Extension,' and afterwards repeated to an English audience at Dresden. Mr. Cotterill has been leading fair maids, like flocks, 'to feed on air,' for it is, we think, the unsubstantial diet of La Quinte that, in certain lectures, he offers to his hearers."—*Sat. Cotton, Henry John Stedman, of the Bengal Civil Service. New India; or, India in Transition, Lon., 1885, p. 8vo; new ed., 1886.

"Mr. Cotton begins by briefly describing the political crisis which is now at work in India. He then proceeds to discuss native opinions and aspirations. After considering the respective feelings of the two races towards each other, he points out with a conscientious accuracy 'the increased bitterness' in their daily relations. He urges the necessity of non-interference and economy in the public administration."—Acad., xxix. 231.

"With the exception of three introductory chapters, which were due to the Dean of Westminster, the whole of the work is occupied with Dr. Cotton's Indian life and work. The first three chapters are written with a charm of style and vividness of portraiture which recall the Life of Arnold, and they contain brief but extremely interesting reminiscences of Bishop Cotton by two of his most intimate friends,—Principal Shairp of St. Andrews, and the late Professor Conington. For the remainder of the volume Mrs. Cotton is almost solely responsible, and the manner in which she has executed her task is, on the whole, excellent."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 574.

"We question whether any interpreter, native or foreign, has more truly or tersely expressed the purpose of this wondrous work than Mr. Coupland when he says, 'The theme of the drama of "Faust" is the Trial and Triumph of Man. Immaterial whether we think of the individual or the race, the story is the same—Faust is the colossal man, Faust is the long spiritual history of our planet. . . . For myself, I hear this echo in every part:—Aspiration, not attainment, is the lot of man; and aspiration is only born of surrender to that spirit of unselfish beauty which in its manifold earthly disguises is still ever of the heaven, heavenly.' This is undoubtedly the pith of the matter, and he who follows this clue will not go far astray."—Sat. Rev.

Courthope, William, 1808–1866; entered the office of the College of Arms as clerk in 1833; was appointed Rouge Croix Pursuivant in 1839, Somerset Herald in 1854, and registrar of the college in 1859. He revised and edited Debrett's Complete Peerage, 1834, 1836, Debrett's Baronetage, 1835, and Sir N. H. Nicolas's Historic Peerage, 1857. 1. Synopsis of the Extinct Baronetage of England, Lon., 1835, 8vo. 2. Memoir of Daniel Chamier, Minister of the Reformed Church: with Notices of his Descendants, Lon., 1852, 8vo. Privately printed. 3. A Pictorial History of the Earls of Warwick in the Rows Role, 1859, 4to. (The title-page bears the date 1845.)

Courthope, William John, b. 1842, at Malling vicarage, near Lewes, Sussex, Eng., eldest son of Rev. William Courthope; was educated at Harrow School, and at New College, Oxford, where he was first class in Classical Moderations 1863; first class in the Final Classical Schools 1865; B.A. 1866; M.A. 1877. He gained the Newdigate prize for English verse in 1863 by a poem on "The Tercentenary of Shakespeare," and the Chancellor's prize for English verse in 1868, on "The Genius of Spenser." He is a frequent contributor to the Quarterly Review, and was one of the founders of the National Review, of which he was joint editor till 1887, when he resigned on being appointed civil service commissioner. He was examiner in the Education Department, Whitehall, 1870–87. 1. The Tercentenary of Corydon: a Bucolic Drama, in Three Acts. By Novus Homo. Oxford, 1864, 8vo. 2. The Three Hundredth Anniversary of Shakespeare's Birth: a Prize Poem, Oxford, 1864, 12mo. 3. The Genius of Spenser: an English Prize Essay, Lon., 1868, 8vo. 4. Ludibria Lunæ; or, The Wars of the Women and the Gods: an Allegorical Burlesque, Lon., 1869, p. 8vo.

"The language of a burlesque should be gay, graceful, and harmonious; its plot should be ingenious, compact, and consistent; its pleasantries should avoid grossness, and its personalities should never descend into vulgar abuse. Judged by these canons, Mr. Courthope's poem possesses great merit."—Sat. Rev., xxviii. 95.

5. The Paradise of Birds: an Old Extravaganza in a Modern Dress, Edin., 1870, 16mo; 2d ed., 1873. 6. Readings from the "Spectator:" Selection of Papers, with Notes, Lon., 1884, 12mo. 7. Addison, ("English Men of Letters,") Lon., 1884, p. 8vo.

"It can make no pretence to being a finished study of character. Nor, for lack of material, can it claim to be an exhaustive biography. But it may be fairly described as a trustworthy, straightforward, and enlightened sketch of one of the two greatest of the periodical essayists."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 289.

8. The Liberal Movement in English Literature, Lon., 1885, p. 8vo.

"Mr. Courthope's thesis is that, from the date of the reform of English prose and verse by 'Dryden and Pope' . . . to the outbreak of the Romantic movement under Wordsworth and Coleridge, . . English writers were mainly under the influence of a Conservative reaction. Since that time they have been mainly under the influence of a Liberal movement. . . . No one who is interested in the study of English literature can afford not to read the book."—Sat. Rev., lx. 716.

9. The Works of Alexander Pope: with Introduction and Notes by Rev. Whitwell Elwin and William John Courthope. Vol. v., The Life and Index. Lon., 1889, 8vo. (This completes the edition, in ten volumes, edited successively by J. W. Croker, Rev. Whitwell Elwin, and W. J. Courthope.)

"Himself a poet and scholar of distinction, and, in addition, a poet and scholar strongly in sympathy with his subject, he is, above all, qualified to appraise Pope's position as a writer. Those parts of his book in which he addresses himself to this task are the most accomplished and the most instructive of his pages, and his final chapter upon Pope's place in English literature will probably set the critical tune for many years to come. In his estimate of Pope's character he has endeavoured to imitate the excellent example of Johnson, . . . and to make the study of the writer's work his main business, in preference to moralizing upon his defects as a man."—Sat. Rev., lxviii. 534.

Hum. School. He was made Fellow of Merton College in 1872; became head-master of Somersetshire College, Bath, in 1873, and Fellow of New College, Oxford, 1876. He has contributed to the leading English reviews. 1. The Metaphysics of John Stuart Mill, Lon., 1879, p. 8vo.

"This is a criticism of very great merit. It is terse, lucid, and very careful in exposition. . . . It proves conclusively, we think, the inadequacy and the fluctuating character of Mr. Mill's psychology, and confirms strongly the view taken by Professor Stanley Jevons of Mr. Mill's analysis of the basis of mathematical reasoning."—Spectator, lii. 309.

Cox, Rt. Rev. Sir George William, Bart., M.A., b. 1827; educated at Rugby, and at Trinity College, Oxford, graduating in 1849; took orders in 1850, and, after holding some curacies in Devonshire and an assistant-mastership at Cheltenham College, became vicar of Beaksbourne, Kent, in 1881, and later in the same year was appointed rector of Scrayingham, Yorkshire. In 1886 he was made Bishop of Bloemfontein, South Africa. He succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his uncle in 1877. He has been a contributor to the Edinburgh Review since 1857; has made a specialty of comparative mythology and ancient history, and is a prominent advocate of the sun-myth theory. 1. 9. Latin and Teutonic Christendom: an Historical Sketch, Lon., 1870.

"To the general public Mr. Cox is best known through his admirable 'Tales of Ancient Greece' . . . and his larger and more important work on Aryan Mythology. But if in these subjects he is a zealous disciple and fellow-labourer of Professor Max Müller's, he is hardly a less keen admirer of the late accomplished historian of Latin Christianity, though we doubt whether he has brought the same amount of independent research to bear on Christian history as on that of the ancient religions and civilization of Greece and the remoter East."—Sat. Rev., xxx. 562.

10. A History of Greece: vols. i. and ii., Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"In the main it may be said that, while continually consulting the original authorities, Mr. Cox has drawn most of his facts and arguments directly from the perusal of Mr. Grote's work. . . . They had both the same quarry to dig from; but if Mr. Cox had gone directly to the quarry and not so often to Mr. Grote, there would not be such frequent coincidences in the mode of expression, and there would be a greater difference in the historical illustrations. . . . Mr. Cox's history is remarkably well written. The book is interesting in the highest degree. The tone of it throughout is healthy and high. The reader will find many instructive allusions to other fields of historical inquiry; and he will be able to form a clear picture of the development of the Athenian and Spartan characters and politics, and of part of the work which the Greek nation performed in the history of the world."—Ath., No. 2424.

With JONES, EUSTACE HINTON: 1. Popular Romances of the Middle Ages, Lon., 1871, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1880, 8vo.

"We have here the histories of Arthur, Merlin, Tristrem, Bevis of Hamtoun, Guy of Warwick, Roland, Olger the Dane, Havelok, and Béowulf, all given in the simple, yet powerful and picturesque, language that best suits these early tales; while the skill with which they are condensed is admirable."—Sat. Rev., xxxii. 725.

"The essay and the stories are quite separate, so that provision is made for the possible case of a reader who likes romances and does not like comparative mythology, and for the almost impossible case of a reader interested in comparative mythology who does not care for the romances."—Spectator, xlv. 986.

"It is by no means a bad book for students. . . . The oddest feature about the book is that it is preceded by an abridgment of fifty closely-printed pages. There is something almost pathetic in the tenderness for idle readers which this displays: If you won't read my book, at least read my abstract of it."—Sat. Rev., xvi. 586.

"These sermons, preached in the church which is, for many of us, indelibly associated with the teaching of Frederick Maurice, are full of interest and value on several accounts. They are thoughtful and instructive discourses, well worth perusal for their own sake, and they also present an interesting landmark of thought in the Church of England. . . . The truth is that Mr. Craufurd and teachers like him are trying to make Christianity inoffensive, at the cost of making it meaningless."—Spectator, lviii. 1233.

Crawford, Francis Marion, b. 1845, in Italy, son of the American sculptor, Thomas Crawford; educated at St. Paul's School, Concord, N.H., at the University of Cambridge, Eng., and on the Continent. In 1880 he went to India, and while there was for some time editor of a newspaper. For several years past he has resided chiefly at Rome. 1. Mr. Isaacs: a Tale of Modern India, Lon. and N. York, 1882, p. 8vo.

"We do not deny to the author considerable observation and descriptive power, especially of the scenery of the hills; but his characters are forced and unnatural, his situations and tableaux often excite a smile, and his plot is made up of 'Contradictory Inconceivables.'"—Sat. Rev., lv. 215.

"There is a kind of obvious cleverness about 'Mr. Isaacs' sufficient to excite remark, but upon a second look it disappears. . . . The whole story is only not an outrage because it is so palpably absurd."—Nation, xxxvi. 151.

2. Doctor Claudius: a True Story, 1883, p. 8vo.

"Beyond question 'Doctor Claudius' is next of kin to 'Mr. Isaacs.' . . . It might be that, after a short-lived popularity, these books would be classed as brummagem in literature."—Nation, xxxvi. 553.

3. To Leeward, Lon., 1883, 2 vols. p. 8vo; Bost., 1884, 12mo.

"The tale . . . has been praised because 'not immoral.' By just so much as it is not immoral, it is not artistic, it is not true to life."—Nation, xxxviii. 193.

"He has treated an unpleasant subject in an objectionable manner, and his style is both pretentious and slipshod."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 87.

4. An American Politician, Lon. and Bost., 1884, p. 8vo.

7. A Tale of a Lonely Parish, Lon. and N. York, 1886, p. 8vo.

"Judges of good work . . . will see in its more sober tone and its less ambitious aim the evidence of a care and painstaking which Mr. Crawford has not shown before. . . . Mr. Juxon is a figure that deserves to stand beside any one of the worthy English squires with whom fiction has made us friends."—Nation, xliii. 14.

8. Saracinesca, Lon., 1887, 3 vols. p. 8vo; N. York, 1 vol. ("The Cardinal" in this novel is understood to be Cardinal Antonelli.)

"It needed almost as much courage as talent to give the counterfeit presentment of one who was at once one of the greatest statesmen of his day and the best abused. The result amply justifies the attempt. . . . For the rest, 'Saracinesca' is a very remarkable book, and a great advance upon any of the author's previous work."—Acad., xxxi. 286.

9. Marzio's Crucifix, Lon., 1887, 3 vols. p. 8vo; N. York, 1 vol. 12mo.

"In 'Marzio's Crucifix' there is hardly a superfluous page. It is short, yet not hasty, strong, and well finished." —Nation, xlvi. 142.

"Nothing but very clever writing—and Mr. Crawford is always clever—can stifle one's sense of the ludicrous in reading these pages. Dr. Johnson, Julius Cæsar, Francis I., Bayard, Pascal, Heine, and two or three more dead men, sitting with the living on the grass, or on boulders of rock, and discussing modern history and the latest problems of social life, has its absurd side, of which the reader is sometimes keenly conscious."—Spectator, lxi. 1101.

There is a freshness and frankness in the style, a directness and vigour of diction, together with touches of dry humour every now and then, which delight the reader and carry him over the interminable ins and outs of papal and Italian intrigue. The book is as fascinating as a romance; and yet there is never for a moment a suspicion that strict and rigid accuracy has been sacrificed to picturesque effect."—Acad., xxxii. 33.

Croll, James, LL.D., F.R.S., 1821–1890, b. at Little Whitefield, Perthshire, Scotland; attended school for five years, but was mainly self-educated, acquiring while young a pretty extensive knowledge of the fundamental principles of natural philosophy. He was apprenticed to a millwright when about sixteen years old, and worked at that trade for eight years, when he was obliged from the effects of an accident to give it up. He was afterwards an insurance agent. From the age of twenty-five to forty he gave much attention to the study of metaphysics. In 1859 he became keeper of the Andersonian University and Museum in Glasgow, retaining that post until 1867, when he joined the Geological Survey of Scotland, from which he retired in 1881. He published in scientific journals and in the Transactions of learned societies about ninety separate memoirs and papers on geological climatology, which attracted wide attention and are regarded as important contributions to the literature of physical geography and geology. 1. The Philosophy of Theism: an Inquiry into the Dependence of Theism on Metaphysics, and the Determination of Molecular Motion considered in Relation to Theism, Lon., 1857, p. 8vo. 2. What determines Molecular Motion? the Fundamental Problem of Nature. Reprinted from the Philosophical Magazine. Lon., 1872, 8vo. 3. Climate and Time in their Geological Relations: a Theory of Secular Changes of the Earth's Climate. Illust. Lon., 1875, 8vo; new ed., Edin., 1885.

"This is one of the most philosophical contributions which have been made to the science of geology within the last half-century. Every page of this volume is distinguished by close and earnest thought, and the conclusions arrived at by the author are, whether we accept them or not, the result of striking powers of deductive analysis."—Ath., No. 2488.

"His epoch-making work on 'Climate and Time' is still [1886] recognized only by the little band of like-minded workers all the world over who have eagerly appropriated and assimilated in detail the leading ideas with which it revolutionized climatological science."—GRANT ALLEN: Acad., xxx. 312.

4. Discussions on Climate and Cosmology, Edin., 1885, p. 8vo.

"The papers themselves consist throughout of detailed arguments and discussions, reinforcing and restating the general principles of 'Climate and Time' with special reference to the modifications of the theory proposed by Mr. Wallace in his 'Island Life,' and to the objections more or less pertinently raised against it by sundry astronomical and physical authorities."—GRANT ALLEN: Acad., xxx. 312.

5. Stellar Evolution, and its Relations to Geological Time, Lon., 1889, cr. 8vo.

"He has, in my humble opinion, been the first to recognize the full importance of one of the agencies which, under possible conditions, may have profoundly affected the climate of the globe during past epochs, although I do not believe that, in the present state of our knowledge, we can safely draw those positive inferences at which he has arrived. Even those who are unable to accept any portion of his theory as to the causes of past changes of climate must feel indebted to his writings for numerous valuable suggestions, and for the removal of many popular opinions which his acute criticism has shown to be untenable."—JOHN BALL: Notes of a Naturalist in South America, Appendix B.

Cross, John Walter. George Eliot's Life, as related in her Letters and Journals. Arranged and edited by her Husband. Edin. and Lon., 1885, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"The novel method of extracts arranged in order of time tells the tale spontaneously, and George Eliot the woman stands forth revealed to the world in all the strength and refinement of her intellect, in all the clinging trustfulness of her moral and emotional nature. . . . This stern independence of intellect combined with a complete dependence on others for the emotional life gives the characteristic tone throughout her life, and we are continually coming across a severe philosophical disquisition side by side with an outburst of uncontrollable affection or longing. She has doubtless portrayed this side of her nature in Maggie Tulliver, with her impulsive affection, her emotional dependence on others. But she had recognized it much earlier when speaking of herself as 'ivy-like as I am by nature,' and in this peculiarly womanly quality she remained a very woman to the last. Manly intellect and girlish heart were united in her to an unusual degree. This problematic nature serves to explain—so far as it bears explanation—the crux of her life—her union with George Henry Lewes. . . . She had evidently found in him some one to cling to amid the dreary solitude of life in London lodgings. . . . The predominance of the philosophic over the artistic spirit in George Eliot has tended to make these volumes, containing the record of her private life, rather dull and—dare we say it?—commonplace. She was a great woman, but this is not a great book. Like all thinkers, she intended to weave a web of theory between herself and life, and seemed to reserve all her humour and liveliness for her books."—Ath., Nos. 2988, 2989.

"A biography so constituted is as artificial a production as was ever put before the world. . . . This kind of intellectual mosaic work cannot produce a life-like picture. . . . All the didactic side of George Eliot's character is fairly represented by the extracts from her letters and journals. We see, and it is most interesting to see, her intense preoccupation with the truths which she pressed upon her readers. . . . Unfortunately, Mr. Cross's admiration for the moral and, so to speak, religious side of his wife's character has, in the description he has given of her, caused him strangely to leave out of view the amazing gifts of humor and imagination which rendered it possible for George Eliot to interest the world in her teaching."—Nation, xl. 283.

"Of the actual events of George Eliot's not very eventful life these volumes tell little that was not known before, but as a commentary on her works they are simply invaluable. . . . The way in which these volumes are saturated with what may be called the cant of Freethinking, the goody-goodiness of irreligion, the unction of the anti-supernatural, the gush of Positivism and Nihilism, might be disagreeable if it were not exceedingly interesting. The moral and intellectual atmosphere is that of the class-room and the tea-party, only that the experiences are anti-Christian and the proceedings are opened with a chapter of Strauss instead of a chapter of the Bible. . . . It will probably provoke screams from her admirers, but we say hardily that if at the time when she fell under Lewes's male influence she had fallen under the male influence of an orthodox Churchman she would probably have been a pillar of the faith and a brand plucked from the burning. The person whom superficial critics long took to be the most masculine of her sex was a very woman."—Sat. Rev., lix. 181.

"Taken as a whole, this Life leaves us with the impression of a lofty mind of singularly feeble instincts and singularly amiable sentiments,—somewhat slow and elaborate in its movements, and almost artificially judicial in its attitude towards every new intellectual claim. A sceptical Milton, without his epic genius, though with a very real dramatic gift of her own, we yet never see that gift in anything which she writes in her own name."—Spectator, lviii. 151.

"Mr. Cross has done his work, as far as we can discern, with admirable judgment, fine feeling, and dignified self-subordination to his theme. . . . We can afford to sacrifice a trivial vivacity for sake of a deeper spiritual interest. . . . We can supply something from George Eliot's writings which sufficiently represents what is here missing; and we receive a gift of greater worth."—E. DOWDEN: Acad., xxvii. 89.

Cross, Mary Ann, ("George Eliot,") 1819–1880, b. at Arbury Farm, in the parish of Chilvers Coton, Warwickshire. Her father, Robert Evans, began life as a carpenter, but afterwards became a land-agent. He was twice married, his second wife, the mother of "George Eliot," being Christiana Pearson. In 1820 her father removed to Gripp House, an old place, half manor, half farm, where Mary Ann passed her childhood, of which the early pages of The Mill on the Floss are in substance a reproduction. In her eighth or ninth year she was sent to a boarding-school at Nuneaton. Miss Lewis, the principal governess of the school, became her intimate friend, and corresponded with her for years, helping to influence her religious faith in the direction of Evangelicanism. In 1832 she was sent to a school at Coventry, where she remained till Christmas, 1835. In 1836 her mother died, and she took charge of her father's household, removing with him in 1841 to Coventry, where she became very intimate with the family of Charles Bray, (q. v., supra.) His wife, Mrs. Caroline Bray, supra, was the sister of Charles Hennell, who had published, in 1838, an Inquiry concerning the Origin of Christianity, which was translated into German, with a preface by Strauss. The reading of this book, her intimacy with the Brays, and various other circumstances led to an abandonment of her orthodox views, which caused a temporary estrangement from her father. She thought of establishing herself as a teacher at Leamington, but soon returned to her father's house and resumed her old life. About this time she met Miss Brabant, who had undertaken a translation of Strauss's Life of Jesus, a task which, on her marriage, in 1843, to Charles Hennell, she handed over to Miss Evans. It was accomplished under many discouragements, and the money for its publication obtained by a subscription started by Mr. Hennell. In 1849 Mr. Evans died. His daughter went abroad soon afterwards with the Brays, and remained for some months in Geneva, in the house of M. d'Albert, an artist, who became her friend, painted a portrait of her which is now in the library at Geneva, and afterwards published French translations of several of her novels. In 1850 she returned to England, and in 1851, having accepted the position offered her through Mr. Bray, of assistant editor of the Westminster Review, she removed to London. Here she became interested in the writings of Comte and the positivist doctrines, by which she was influenced, though her adherence to them was never unqualified. She made the acquaintance of a number of notable men, including Herbert Spencer and George Henry Lewes, then editor of the Leader, whom she speaks of on her first introduction to him as "a sort of miniature Mirabeau in appearance," whom she distrusted a little at first, but soon pronounced "a man of heart and conscience wearing a mask of flippancy." In July, 1854, she entered into the connection with Lewes which she always regarded as a marriage, though without the legal sanction. They spent some time at Weimar, and then settled in Richmond, where they lived for three years. Urged by Lewes to try her hand at a novel, she began Amos Barton in 1856. It was sent without the writer's name to Blackwood, and with others in the series of Scenes of Clerical Life appeared anonymously in Blackwood's Magazine, the name George Eliot being adopted only on their republication in book form. Adam Bede followed, and made the pseudonyme famous. Her success as a writer relieved Lewes and herself from pecuniary anxieties, enabled him to devote his time to the prosecution of biological and philosophical studies, and brought a throng of friends and admirers to their Sunday receptions at the Priory, Regent's Park, where they lived from 1863 to 1876. After the death of Lewes, in 1878, she occupied herself for some time in preparing his unfinished writings for the press, and founded a studentship in memory of him. In April, 1880, she was married to J. W. Cross, supra, and Dec. 22 of the same year she died after a brief illness. Besides the works enumerated below, and some articles in the Westminster Review not included in the collection published since her death, she contributed two short stories—The Lifted Veil, and Brother Jacob—to Blackwood's Magazine in 1860, and Agatha, a poem, to the Atlantic Monthly in 1869. 1. Scenes of Clerical Life. By George Eliot. Edin. and Lon., 1857, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 3d ed., 1860.

"The work has satire, but the satire is loving; it has pathos, but the tears make human nature more beautiful; it is homely in its pictures, but they are connected with our most impassioned sensibilities and our daily duties; it is religious, without cant or intolerance; and, as Ruskin says of a good book, 'It may contain firm assertion or stern satire, but it never sneers coldly nor asserts haughtily; and it always leads you to love or reverence something with your whole heart.'"—Sat. Rev., v. 566.

"The exquisite truth and delicacy both of the humour and the pathos of these stories I have never seen the like of . . . I have observed what seemed to me such womanly touches in these moving fictions that the assurance on the title-page is insufficient to satisfy me even now. If they originated with no woman, I believe that no man ever before had the art of making himself mentally so like a woman since the world began."—Letter of Charles Dickens, Jan. 17, 1858, ap. George Eliot's Life, ii. 3.

4. Adam Bede, Edin. and Lon., 1859; 10th ed., 1862, 1 vol. cr. 8vo. (For a correspondence in reference to the authorship of the book, which was claimed by or for a person named Liggins, see Ath., No. 1650, 1651.)

"A novel of the highest class. Full of quiet power, without exaggeration and without any strain after effect, it produces a deep impression on the reader, which remains long after the book is closed. . . . 'Adam Bede' is a book to be accepted, not criticised."—Ath., No. 1635.

"The author has got into an original field of observation, and as he has very great powers of observing, and a happy method of making his detached points of observation into a connected whole, he gives us something we have not had before. He is evidently a country clergyman, and the object of his observation has been the rustic life of a village in one of the central counties,—a very unpromising object of observing to most men, but most men are not observers. . . . The continuity of character is so well kept up . . . that it would be unfair to speak of the tale as a series of disconnected sketches; but the continuity is wholly in the characters, and the story, as a story, breaks down."—Sat. Rev., vii. 250.

5. The Mill on the Floss, Edin. and Lon., 1860, 3 vols. p. 8vo; 5th ed., 1862, p. 8vo.

"We do not consider 'The Mill on the Floss' equal to 'Adam Bede.' The authoress has not given herself fair play. There is the old freedom of hand, but the workmanship is neither so delicate nor so elaborate as in the 'Clerical Scenes' and 'Adam Bede;' neither is the story, as a story, at all comparable to 'Adam Bede' for interest, or for artistic treatment."—Ath., No. 1693.

"Now that we are wise after the event, we can detect many subtle signs of female authorship in 'Adam Bede;' but at the time it was generally accepted as the work of a man. To speak the simple truth, without affectation of politeness, it was thought to be too good for a woman's story. . . . 'The Mill on the Floss' may not, perhaps, be so popular as 'Adam Bede,' but it shows no falling off nor any exhaustion of power. . . . If Mrs. Poyser remains unequalled, the great variety of characters, all distinct and yet all hitherto unanticipated, who figure in the first volume of the 'Mill on the Floss,' show that the range of the writer's observation goes far beyond one or two specimens. . . . Both in the description and in the dialogue there are exhibited a neatness of finish, a comprehensiveness of detail, and a relish for subdued comedy that constantly bring back to our recollection the best productions of Miss Austen's genius. . . . Portraiture, however, and the description of farmers and their wives, only occupies one portion of George Eliot's thoughts. There is a side of her mind which is entirely unlike that of Miss Austen, and which brings her much closer to Charlotte Brontë. She is full of meditation on some of the most difficult problems of life. She occupies herself with the destinies, the possibilities, and the religious position of all the people of whom she cares to think. . . . But the objection which we feel to difficult moral problems being handled in fiction is certainly not removed by the writings of either of these gifted women."—Sat. Rev., ix. 470.

6. Silas Marner, the Weaver of Raveloe, Edin. and Lon., 1861, p. 8vo; 7th ed., 1861, fp. 8vo.

"The plot of 'Silas Marner' is good, and the delineation of character is excellent. But other writers who have the power of story-telling compose plots as interesting, and perhaps sketch characters as well. It is in the portraiture of the poor, and of what it is now fashionable to call 'the lower middle class,' that this writer is without a rival; and no phase of life could be harder to draw. . . . The gift is so special, the difficulty is so great, the success is so complete, that the works of George Eliot come on us as a new revelation of what society in quiet English parishes really is and has been. . . . Within its limits, 'Silas Marner' is quite equal to either of its predecessors, and in combining the display of the author's characteristic excellences with freedom from blemishes and defects, is perhaps superior."—Sat. Rev., xi. 369.

7. Romola, Edin. and Lon., 1863, 3 vols. p. 8vo. (Originally published in the Cornhill Magazine, July, 1862, to August, 1863.) An édition de luxe, with illustrations by Sir Frederick Leighton, 1880.

"As a serial story 'Romola' was not attractive; readers found their patience wearied by the minuteness with which they were required to follow the transitions of popular feeling in Florence. . . . But, read as a consecutive whole, these scenes take their due place as the framework and background for the human characters, whose struggles and hopes and fears have a perennial interest, and which are in 'Romola' as vivid as if they concerned English men and women of 1863. . . . The character of Savonarola is the gem of the book; it has been grasped and delineated with a wonderful force and truth that commends itself instinctively as a real presentment of the man. . . As a novel 'Romola' cannot be called entertaining: it requires sustained attention, and it is by no means light reading; but those who do not seek the mere amusement of an exciting story will find noble things in 'Romola,'—eloquent and beautiful pages,—subtle utterances and lofty thoughts. It has not the powerful interest that is to be found in the author's former novels; but there are indications of much higher powers of mind."—Ath., No. 1863.

"Great as is the power displayed in it, and varied as is the interest awakened in it, there is still the general impression produced by it that the authoress has been tempted into a field where, indeed, she is not less than she has been, but where her merits are obscured and their effect impaired. . . . Sometimes the antiquarian quite drowns the novelist. . . . The conception of the character of Savonarola which is here given is profound, subtle, and probably true. . . . But there is little life in the scenes where he is introduced. He is merely a study, clever, original, and faithful. . . . If she has got nothing else out of her Florentine researches, and out of her selection of an historical, remote, and uninteresting period, she has at least got the possibility of drawing such a character as Tito,—a Greek and an Italian at once, beautiful, refined, flexible, mean, cowardly, and yet charming and kind, and not very bad. In the latter part of the tale the subtle drawing of his character is swallowed up by the sad necessities of the Florentine story. . . . But in the earlier part of the story his character is worked out with an infinite vividness and among much simpler elements. . . . Romola, however, is the central character of the work which bears her name, and the interest attaching to her increases as the book goes on."—Sat. Rev., xvi. 124.

8. Felix Holt, the Radical, Edin. and Lon., 1866, 3 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., same year, 2 vols. 12mo.

"As a story 'Felix Holt' is singularly inartistic. . . . As a novel with a hero there is no doubt that it is a failure. . . . It is as a broad picture of midland country life in England, thirty years ago, that 'Felix Holt' is, to our taste, most interesting. On this subject the author writes from a full mind, with a wealth of fancy, of suggestion, of illustration, at the command of no other English writer, bearing you along on the broad and placid rises of her speech, with a kind of retarding persuasiveness which allows her conjured images to sink slowly into your very brain."—H. James, Jr.: Nation. iii. 127.

"The popular notion about the excellence and brilliancy of the style of George Eliot's novels is that it is simply the excellence of a painter like Teniers. People talk of 'Silas Marner' as if there were nothing in it except Nancy Lammeter and the famous meeting in the parlour of the inn; of the 'Mill on the Floss' as if it were only a rural chronicle of Gleigs and Dodsons and Tullivers; of 'Adam Bede' as if it contained no more than a photographic reproduction of the life of midland dairies and farm-houses and apple-orchards. No doubt the same kind of remarks will be made about the latest, and in some points the best, of the writer's stories. And there is no lack of material even for the limited appreciation involved in such criticism as this. . . . One group succeeds another, and not a single figure appears in any of them, though it be ever so far in the background, which is not perfectly drawn and perfectly coloured."—Sat. Rev., xxi. 722.

"If there is any fault in this rich and fascinating story, . . . it is in an overflowing affluence of lively and striking detail, which hardly leaves room for that force, subtlety, and intensity in the carving out of the principal characters which marked 'Adam Bede' and 'Romola.' This is the brightest, the least penetrated with inner melancholy, of all George Eliot's stories, and there are wanting in it, perhaps as a consequence, some degrees of that deep-cut purpose graven by a brooding imagination which gave the former tales so much grandeur of outline."—Spectator, xxxix. 692.

9. The Spanish Gypsy: a Poem, Edin. and Lon., 1868, 8vo; 3d ed. same year.

"George Eliot's verse occupies a lofty table-land, but in all the region there is not a peak which pierces the cloud. As a composition, 'The Spanish Gypsy' is greatly superior to 'Aurora Leigh;' but Mrs. Browning, though she failed, as might have been expected, in the attempt to write a great poem, was born a poetess. If the larger and more masculine nature of George Eliot had shared the same mysterious quality, she might perhaps almost have confuted the inference drawn from the experience of ages, that the highest sphere of poetry is inaccessible to women."—Sat. Rev., xxvi. 21.

10. Middlemarch: a Study of English Provincial Life, Lon. and Edin., 1872, 4 vols. cr. 8vo. (Originally published in eight parts, December, 1871, to December, 1872.)

"If we are to call 'Middlemarch' a novel at all, we may say that as a didactic novel it has scarcely been equalled. Never before have so keen and varied an observation, so deep an insight into character and motives, so strong a grasp of conceptions, such power of picturesque description, worked together to represent through the agency of fiction an author's moral and social views. But the reservation we have implied is a broad one. No talent, not genius itself, can quite overcome the inherent defect of a conspicuous, constantly prominent lesson, or bridge over the disparity between the story-teller with an ulterior aim ever before his own eyes and the reader's, and the ideal story-teller whose primary impulse is a story to tell and human nature to portray,—not human nature as supporting a theory, but human nature as he sees it. . . . Not but that he must be hard to please who cannot, without overtaxing his powers of attention, derive plenty of amusement pure and simple out of 'Middlemarch,'—all that the ordinary novel-reader reads a novel for; but it would be unjust to so thoughtful, powerful, and earnest a writer to ignore the intention that underlies the whole. And to read such writing and thinking as they ought to be read is a real exercise of mind; especially as we own ourselves, while charmed by inimitable touches of character, and enjoying the author's graces of style and felicities of illustration and allusion, not seldom differing from her views and strictures upon society, and her suggestions for its amendment. . . . But what a ceaselessly busy observation, what nicety of penetration, what a tenacity of memory, are indicated by these different social pictures! All the gradations of rank and class nicely measured and appreciated, even while the distinctions of rank are represented as provoking the low ambition of common souls, and therefore things to be overstepped by natures of higher insight and more universal good will. In such questions the book is a deliberate challenge to society as at present constituted."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 733, 794.

"If it were necessary to fix upon any one quality as the characteristic trait of the book, few attentive critics would hesitate to name irony, taking a very extensive sense of the term, as its distinguishing feature. The avowed irony of much of the writing is too obvious to call for much notice. What is better worth observation is the indirect forms in which the same tendency shows itself. There is, for example, a constant irony of situation. Misfortunes befall men just at the moment when they feel the safest from them. . . . Exactly the same characteristic appears in the conversations of common people, auctioneers, horse-dealers, and landladies, in which George Eliot delights. They are no doubt amusing and truthful enough in themselves, but they derive a peculiar gusto from their presenting an unconscious parody on the thoughts and language of educated people. But all the minor forms of irony sink to nothing compared with the lesson enforced by the conclusion of 'Middlemarch' itself. . . . The conclusion of the whole matter is, that happiness depends on the adaptation of character to circumstances, and that, therefore, in a commonplace world, commonplace characters alone have a fair chance of happiness. . . . Though 'Middlemarch' has stuff enough in it to fill out four or five ordinary novels, and though it would undoubtedly at once make the reputation of an unknown author, it will not be permanently placed on a level with 'Adam Bede,' 'Romola,' or with the most exquisite of all George Eliot's works,—the 'History of Silas Marner.' The defect of the book is, that the parts are more striking than the whole."—Nation, xvi. 60, 76.

"'Middlemarch,' if not the best or the pleasantest of George Eliot's works, is yet beyond all measure the most powerful."—Ath., No. 2354.

"The book is called 'A Study of Provincial Life,' and answers to its title. Round the central characters are grouped at greater or less distance all the elements of country society,—the country gentry, the surveyor, the clergymen of various types, the country doctors, the bankers, the manufacturers, the shopkeepers, the coroner, the auctioneer, the veterinary surgeon, the horse-dealer, the innkeepers, all drawn with a force and yet a perspective which it takes time, and a graduation of feeling not easily commanded in the few hours usually given to a novel, to apprehend."—Spectator, xlv. 1554.

11. The Legend of Jubal, and other Poems, Edin. and Lon., 1874.

"The volume in all poetic respects is an advance upon the 'Spanish Gypsy.' In those qualities which, without being indispensable to poetry, supplement and elevate it, —in large-heartedness, tenderness, and humour,—it is worthy of the author of 'The Mill on the Floss."—Ath., No. 2429.

12. Daniel Deronda, Edin. and Lon., 1876, 4 vols. cr. 8vo.

"We recognize George Eliot's distinctive excellences all through; we never detect a flat or trivial mood of mind; if anything, the style is more weighty and piquant than ever, we may even say loaded with thought. Nobody can resort to the time-honoured criticism that the work would have been better for more pains, for labour and care are conspicuous throughout, and labour and care which always produce suitable fruit. But the fact is that the reader never—or so rarely as not to affect his general posture of mind—feels at home. The author is ever driving at something foreign to his habits of thought. The leading persons—those with whom her sympathies lie—are guided by interests and motives with which he has never come in contact, and seem to his perception to belong to the stage once tersely described as peopled by 'such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language which was never heard, upon topics which will never arise in the commerce of mankind.' . . . 'Daniel Deronda' may be defined as a religious novel without a religion."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 356, 390.

"Whether consciously so designed or not, 'Daniel Deronda' comes to us as a counterpoise or a correlative of the work which immediately preceded it. There we saw how two natures framed for large disinterested services to humanity can be narrowed—the one into the round of the duteous sweet observances of domestic life, the other into the servitude, which the world imposes upon those who accept its base terms and degrading compensations. Here we are shown how two natures can be ennobled and enlarged: the one rescued through anguish and remorse, and by the grace, human if also divine, which the soul of man has power to bestow upon the soul of man, from the self-centred insolence of youth, the crude egoism of a spoiled child; and rendered up, first a crushed penitent to sorrow, then weak as a new-yeaned lamb to the simplicity of a mother's love, and at last plunged into a purgatory of fire, consuming and quickening and seven times heated, until the precious soul is released from bond and forfeiture, and reclaimed for places consecrated by love and duty; the other, a nature of finer mould and temper than that of Lydgate, with none of the spots of commonness in it which produced a disintegrating effect on Lydgate's action, but exposed through its very plenteousness and flexibility of sympathy to peculiar dangers,—the danger of neutrality in the struggle between common things and high which fills the world, the danger of wandering energy and wasted ardours; and from these dangers Deronda is delivered; he is incorporated into a great ideal life, made one of his nation and race, and there is confided to him the heritage of duty bound with love which was his forefathers', and of which it had been sought to deprive him. Such are the spiritual histories of Gwendolen Harleth and of Daniel Deronda, told in the briefest summary. When we speak of 'Middlemarch' as more realistic, and the later novel as more ideal, it is not meant that the one is true to the facts of life and the other untrue; it is rather meant that in the one the facts are taken more in the gross, and in the other there is a passionate selection of those facts that are representative of the highest (and also of the lowest) things. . . . That some clever critics should find the hero of George Eliot's last novel detestable is easily understood; that some should find him incredible proves no more than that clever critics in walking from their lodgings to their club, and from their club to their lodgings, have not exhausted the geography of the habitable globe."—EDWARD DOWDEN: Studies in Literature, 284.

'Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves,'

"It is only proper that we should give Mr. Dowden credit for his independence on one point of some importance; we mean his appreciation of 'Daniel Deronda,' and his protest against the critics who stand amazed and indignant at a genius to whose work they are accustomed presuming to strike out a new and unfamiliar path."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 798.

"To me 'Daniel Deronda' is one step further upwards in the career of a soaring genius who was destined, if life was spared, to achieve greater heights than any to which it had yet risen. It is the result of the normal and regular growth of unrivalled powers which were ever seeking subjects more and more worthy for their exercise. It is as superior to 'Adam Bede' as 'Hamlet' is superior to 'Much Ado about Nothing.' It is an effort to realize the highest purposes of art, to seize the strongest passions, the loftiest heights, and the lowest depths of human nature."—OSCAR BROWNING: Life of George Eliot, 144.

"The sense of dissatisfaction with the result of 'Daniel Deronda' has its source in something deeper than any of the peculiarities of the story. The reader feels that there is something disappointing in the development of George Eliot's own genius. The power, the humor, and the deep moral insight which were revealed to the public in 'Adam Bede' and 'Scenes of Clerical Life' are all to be found in 'Deronda.' The genius is still there, but the proportions of the qualities which make up the genius have, it is felt, gradually changed. Reflection prevails over description, and the moral purpose always discernible in George Eliot's works threatens to throw into the shade the author's creative power. For observation and painting are substituted analysis and reflection, and instead of the action of a drama telling its own tale you have the reflective comment of a chorus of moralists."—Nation, xxiii. 245.

"No book of hers before this has ever appeared so laboured, and sometimes even so forced and feeble, in its incidental remarks. . . . No book of hers before this ever contained so little humour. . . . On the other hand, no book of hers before this, unless, perhaps, we except 'Adam Bede,' ever contained so fine a plot, so admirably worked out. No book of hers before this was ever conceived on ideal lines so noble, the whole effect of which, when we look back to the beginning from the end, seems to have been so powerfully given. No book of hers before this has ever contained so many fine characters, and betrayed so subtle an insight into the modes of growth of a better moral life within the shrivelling buds and blossoms of the selfish life which has been put off and condemned. And, last of all, no book of hers before this has breathed so distinctly religious a tone. . . . The art of this story is essentially religious. . . . What makes it, after all, uncertain whether, in spite of the much greater inequality of execution and style, 'Daniel Deronda' may not rank in the estimate of the critics of the future as a greater work altogether than any which George Eliot has previously written, is the powerful construction of the plot—almost a new feature in her stories—and the occasional grandeur of the conceptions which she successfully works out. . . . 'Daniel Deronda' thus seems to us much more unequal than 'Middlemarch.' But it rises at certain points definitely above that great book. Its summits are higher, but its average level of power is very much lower."—Spectator, xlix. 1131.

13. Impressions of Theophrastus Such, Edin. and Lon., 1879, cr. 8vo; new ed., 1880, 12mo.

"The title of the book provokes a comparison which the book itself hardly stands. Instead of the wide field of observation taken by Theophrastus and his great modern imitator La Bruyère, we find ourselves in a literary coterie. . . . Here and there, and especially at the end, the peculiar views associated with her name peep out, but most of the portraits are those of characters influenced not so much by opinion, whether heterodox or orthodox, as by personal considerations of feeling and interest. They are drawn with no more hidden motive than the indulgence of a keen insight into the weaknesses of human nature, especially as shown in the class that feels itself on a higher level than the mass,—into the follies of thinkers, the jealousies, pretensions, ambitions, envyings, disappointments of would-be leaders of thought, into the conceit, the vanity, the avidity for praise, of literary pretenders. Satire is necessarily the prevailing mood, but tempered by sympathy and pity for the victims of these qualities."—Sat. Rev., xlvii. 805.

14. Essays and Leaves from a Note-Book, 1884, p. 8vo. (Contains four articles from the Westminster Review, viz.: Silly Novels by Lady Novelists; German Wit; Natural History of German Life; Worldliness and Other-Worldliness: the Poet Young. Also, Three Months in Weimar, from Fraser's Magazine; Influence of Rationalism: Lecky's History, from the Fortnightly; Address to Workingmen, by Felix Holt, from Blackwood's Magazine; Leaves from a Note-Book.)

"These essays will not add to the reputation of their author. . . . It would be difficult to say that they stand prominently above the general average of such essays. . . . They date from the period before Mr. Matthew Arnold had imported the method of Sainte-Beuve into English criticism, and in consequence they suffer by comparison with later work of a more subtle and artistic character."—Ath., No. 2939.

The "Cabinet Edition" of the works of George Eliot, 21 vols. cr. 8vo, contains the novels, poems, essays, and short stories, but not the translations. There are several uniform editions of the novels. A volume entitled "Wise, Witty, and Tender Sayings, in Prose and Verse, selected from the Works of George Eliot," was published in 1874 and has gone through seven editions.

General Criticism:

"Her whole work is imbued with ethical notions. The novel is, no less than the poem, a criticism of life; and the remarkable influence of George Eliot's novels has been mainly due to the consistent application of moral ideas to the problems set by each novel. Their stimulative effect was due to the fact that her ethical views were in consonance with some of the most advanced ideas of the age. The three chief principles which dominated her thinking were the reign of law in human affairs, the solidarity of society, and the constitution of society as incarnate history, (the phrase is Riehl's.) Flowing from these were the ethical laws which rule the world of her novels, the principle summed up in Novalis's words, 'Character is Fate,' the radiation of good and evil deeds throughout society, and the supreme claims of family or race. Add to these the scientific tone of impartiality, with its moral analogue, the extension of sympathy to all, and we have exhausted the idées mères of George Eliot's system, which differentiates her novels from all others of the age."—Ath., No. 2939.

"There will be more perfect novels and truer systems. But she has little rivalry to apprehend until philosophy inspires finer novels, or novelists teach nobler lessons of duty to masses of men. If ever science or religion reigns alone over an undivided empire, the books of George Eliot might lose their central and unique importance; but, as the emblem of a generation distracted between the intense need of believing and the difficulty of belief, they will live to the last syllable of recorded time. . . . In spite of all that is omitted, and of specific differences regarding the solemn questions of Conscience, Humility, and Death, there are few works in literature whose influence is so ennobling; and there were people divided from her in politics and religion by the widest chasm that exists on earth who felt at her death what was said of the Greek whom she had most deeply studied—σκότον εἶναι τεθνηκότος."—Lord Acton: Nineteenth Century, March, 1885.

"Neither 'Felix Holt,' nor 'Adam Bede,' nor 'Romola,' is a masterpiece. They have none of the inspiration, the traits, nor the essential simplicity of such a work. They belong to a kind of writing in which the English tongue has the good fortune to abound,—that clever, voluble, bright-colored novel of manners which began with the present century under the auspices of Miss Edgeworth and Miss Austen. George Eliot is stronger in degree than either of these, but she is not different in kind. She brings to her task a richer mind, but she uses it in much the same way. With a certain masculine comprehensiveness which they lack, she is eventually a feminine—a delightfully feminine—writer. She has the microscopic observation, not a myriad of whose keen notations are worth a single one of those great synthetic guesses with which a real master attacks the truth, and which, by their occasional occurrence in the stories of Mr. Charles Reade, (the much-abused 'Griffith Gaunt' included,) make him, to our mind, the most readable of living English novelists, and prove him a distant kinsman of Shakespeare."—H. James, Jr.: Nation, iii. 127.

"Nous ne pouvons nous empêcher de croire que George Eliot restera dans le roman anglais un phénomène isolé et qu'elle n'aura pas de successeurs et encore moins de disciples. L'impartialité qui est la qualité dominante de son intelligence est rarement propre à faire école. . . . Elle n'a été un si grand peintre de la nature que par des qualités absolument inhérentes à sa personne et qui protègent son originalité contre les efforts les plus habiles de l'imitation ou le zèle de l'admiration la plus enthousiaste. La réalité est ouverte à tout le monde et d'autres pourront s'en inspirer comme George Eliot, mais ils ne relèveront pas d'elle pour cela, car ils ne pourront retrouver ni le même tact, ni la même mesure, ni la même probité d'observation, ni cette même curiosité patiente qui n'abandonne un phénomène que lorsqu'il a été suivi dans toutes ses phases et décrit avec une absolue précision."—Émile Montégut: Écrivains modernes de l'Angleterre, 176.

"Complete in all its parts, and strong in all, the nature of George Eliot is yet not one of those rare natures which without effort are harmonious. There is no impression made more decisively upon the readers of her books than this. No books bear more unmistakably the pain of moral conflict, and the pain of moral victory, only less bitter than that of defeat. Great forces warring with one another, a sorrowful and pathetic victory,—that is what we discern." E. Dowden: Studies in Literature, 258.

"Certain that she belongs to the foremost intellectual forces of our time, and seeing that she is a novelist, (for neither poems nor essays express her genius truly,) some are apt to decide that she stands in the very front rank of the artists of the modern world. That is surely to claim a great deal too much. Cervantes, Fielding, Scott, of course, stand immeasurably apart and above, by virtue of their wealth of imagination, their range of insight into manners, and sympathy with characters of every type. . . . The place of George Eliot will ultimately be found in the group where are set George Sand, Balzac, Jane Austen, Dickens, Thackeray, the Brontës. Judging her purely as an artist, we can hardly hope that her ultimate popularity will quite equal theirs. That she is immeasurably superior to them all as thinker, teacher, inspirer of thought and purifier of soul, will perhaps be little disputed. As facile creator of types, painter of varied character, veracious chronicler of manners, she has not their range, vivacity, irrepressible energy. . . . The inexhaustible charm of George Sand, the microscopic vivacity of Jane Austen, the pathetic oddities of Charles Dickens, the terrible Hogarthian pencil of Balzac and Thackeray, were all deliberately foregone by a novelist who read so deeply, who looked on life so profoundly, and who meditated so conscientiously as George Eliot."—Frederic Harrison: Fortnightly Review, xliii. 316.

"There can be no doubt that George Eliot touched the highest point which, in a woman, has been reached in our literature. . . . The remarkable thing about George Eliot's genius is that though there is nothing at all unfeminine in it,—if we except a certain touch of scientific pedantry which is not pedantry in motive, but due only to a rather awkward manipulation of somewhat unfeminine learning, —its greatest qualities are not the least the qualities in which women have usually surpassed men, but rather the qualities in which, till George Eliot's time, women had always been notably deficient. Largeness of mind, largeness of conception, was her first characteristic, as regards both matters of reason and matters of imagination. . . . Her own nature was evidently sedate and rather slow-moving, with a touch of Miltonic stateliness in it, and a love of elaboration at times even injurious to her genius. Yet no characters she ever drew were more powerful than those at the very opposite pole to her own. . . . Her greatest stories lose in form by their too wide reflectiveness, and especially by an engrafted mood of artificial reflectiveness not suitable to her genius. She grew up under Thackeray's spell, and it is clear that Thackeray's satirical vein had too much influence over her from first to last, but especially in some of those earlier tales into which she threw a greater power of passion than any which she had to spare for the two great efforts of her last ten years. . . . George Eliot had no command of Thackeray's literary stiletto, and her substitute for it is unwieldy. . . . Imaginatively, we hardly recognize any defect in this great painter, except that there is too little movement in her stories: they wholly want dash, and sometimes want even a steady current. No novelist, however, in the whole series of English novelists, has combined so much power of painting external life on a broad canvas with so wonderful an insight into the life of the soul. . . . We should rank George Eliot second only in her own proper field—which is not the field of satire—Thackeray's field—to Sir Walter Scott, and second to him only because her imagination, though it penetrates far deeper, had neither the same splendid vigour of movement nor the same bright serenity of tone."—Spectator, liv. 10.

"George Eliot is one of the few thinkers who can see the weakness of humanity, and the comparatively disappointing and mean nature of most objects of pursuit, without being driven by the violence of a common reaction into transcendental artifices. Nobody in her books is made to talk of rapture as a mood of happiness, or as the remedy for failure and the littleness of things. Practical resignation to the harshness and inflexibility of many of those conditions which are the material that a man has to make his life out of, and a sober, not ecstatic, resolution to seize such elements as remain, and force them into the pattern which we have chosen for ourselves,—this is a state of feeling and will which seems to count for a great deal more with her than any solace which can come of beatific visions and discourse of eternal, unspeakable aspirations. . . . Like Mr. Carlyle, too, in this, as in a great many other points, George Eliot perceives that the only course for honest and worthy folk in the tangle which fools, with or without circumbendibuses, contrive to make of the world, is to stick to the work that the hand findeth to do."—J. Crowe, Joseph Archer, C.B., b. 1825, in London, son of Eyre Evans Crowe, supra; was correspondent for the Illustrated London News in the Crimean war and for the London Times during the Indian Mutiny and Franco-Austrian war; he has since held diplomatic posts at Leipsic, Düsseldorf, and Berlin; was royal commissioner for the negotiation of a treaty of commerce with Russia in 1881, and was made commercial attaché for Europe to reside in Paris, 1882. He is joint author with Giovanni Battista Cavalcaselle of the following works: 1. The Early Flemish Painters: Notices of their Lives and Works, Lon., 1857, 8vo; 3d ed., 1879. (A French translation by O. Delepierre, annotated and augmented with unpublished documents by A. Pinchart and C. Ruelens, was published at Brussels in 1862, 2 vols.)

"An exhaustive description of all that is known at present of the lives and of the works of the early painters of those most interesting cities which are now comprised in the Belgian kingdom. . . . We wish it had been made more attractive to the general reader."—Sat. Rev., iii. 380.

2. A New History of Painting in Italy, from the Second to the Sixteenth Century, Lon., 1864–66, 3 vols. 8vo. 3. A History of Painting in North Italy, Venice, Padua, Vicenza, Verona, Ferrara, Milan, Friuli, Brescia, from the Fourteenth to the Sixteenth Century: with Illustrations, Lon., 1871, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The singular diligence with which the actual records of the artists' work have been sought out, or brought together from scattered printed sources, and then collated with their remaining pictures, has not slackened as the authors have advanced over their enormous field. . . . They have been rightly anxious to avoid the snares of word-painting and tinsel; they have much to record, and have thought more of noting it at once than of relating with literary skill; and hence, though we recognize their good taste, yet the book leaves much to be told when the genius of men like Mantegna or Bellini is in question. But it would be unreasonable to complain that the annalist cannot group his masses or preserve his forces, like the historian."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 747.

"This work has many advantages in respect to its subject over that which furnished the former issue with so many charms, which have led to its being rather weakly styled 'the New Vasari,' than which no suggested comparison could be more unfortunate and unjust. . . . 'Vasari' is a book of anecdote. The work before us is so little so that it requires insight to men and their times ere the preciousness of what has been gathered, its vitality above all, becomes recognizable; of gossip it has nothing: its special claims refer to impartiality and accuracy, of which 'Georgio' was innocent."—Ath., No. 2280.

4. Titian: his Life and Times: with some Account of his Family, chiefly from New and Unpublished Records. With Portrait and Illustrations. Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1881.

"Full of information and interest. . . . The authors have neglected nothing that can make their work complete."—Sat. Rev., xliii. 202.

"Take them all in all, these volumes form a true and exhaustive record of what is still left of the work of the most perfect painter in the Venetian school, and therefore, some think, the most perfect painter in the world."—Spectator, l. 151.

"The book is by far the most important contribution made in our time to the history of Art."—Ath., No. 2579.

"It is to be wished that, while so much was being done by the authors to make this book of value to the art student, a little more care had been bestowed upon the illustrations. In these days, when so many admirable new processes of reproduction are in vogue, one can scarcely help feeling aggrieved at being offered such poor outline engravings as these."—MARY M. HEATON: Acad., xi. 371.

5. Raphael: his Life and Works: with Particular Reference to Recently-Discovered Records, and an Exhaustive Study of Extant Drawings and Pictures, Lon., 1883–85, 2 vols. 8vo.

"We have no doubt that in these two volumes is a great—we were going to write an unparalleled—record of the life and doings of the painter, well qualified to stand as a text-book and an honourable monument of the acumen, taste, and research of the authors. . . . We are compelled to lament the absence of outline engravings or illustrations of any kind."—Ath., No. 3027.

"The solid merits of this work are not seriously affected by blemishes which are mostly superficial. It contains a vast mass of matter partly unpublished before, and the whole of this interesting subject is treated in a very wide and comprehensive manner."—J. H. MIDDLETON: Acad., xxvii. 443.

"Notwithstanding the irritating style in which it is written, notwithstanding the (in my opinion) wrong-headedness of many of the judgments expressed upon important questions, it is far more complete, far more suggestive, far more solid, than any other work on the subject."—Letter of W. M. Conway, giving an account of an examination of the "new Raphael literature" and a collection of 800 photographs of his pictures and drawings in the Berlin Museum: Acad., xxx. 157.

Cumming, Constance Frederica Gordon, b. 1837, at Altyre, Morayshire, Scotland, is a daughter of Sir William Gordon Cumming, Bart., of Altyre and Gordonstown, and sister of Roualeyn Gordon Cumming, (q. v., ante, vol. i.,) known as the Lion-Hunter of South Africa. On her mother's side she is descended from the Campbells, and from the celebrated beauty Elizabeth Gunning, Duchess of Argyle. A visit to a married sister living in the Himalayas was followed by twelve years of almost continuous travel. She is a diligent water-color artist, has made sketches throughout her wanderings, and has contributed largely to periodicals. 1. From the Hebrides to the Himalayas: a Sketch of Eighteen Months' Wanderings in Western Isles and Eastern Highlands. Illust. Lon., 1876, 2 vols. 8vo.

"There is no conceivable reason why such distant regions should have been connected in these volumes, except that their names both begin with the letter H. . . . Miss Gordon Cumming has shown that she can use pen and pencil most effectively. . . . The sketches of Hebridean rocks, lakes, and castles are excellent, and the descriptions . . . are lively, faithful, and effective.—Sat. Rev., xli. 588.

2. At Home in Fiji, Edin., 1881, 2 vols. 8vo.

"As the picturesque record of a sojourn in little-known lands, and a thrilling account of customs which are happily becoming things of the past, 'At Home in Fiji' is a very interesting and readable work."—Sat. Rev., lii. 458.

3. A Lady's Cruise in a French Man-of-War: with Map and Illustrations, Lon., 1882, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"It is with the Society Islands that the larger part of Miss Cumming's volumes deals. . . . Looking at the book as a whole, it cannot fail to increase the author's reputation, both as a writer of amusing gossipy letters and as a collector of valuable sociological information."—Ath., No. 2835.

4. Fire Fountains: The Kingdom of Hawaii: its Volcanoes, and the History of its Missions, Edin. and Lon., 1882, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"Her account of the islands is the most temperate, judicious, and exhaustive description for popular purposes that has yet been published."—Ath., No. 2881.

5. Granite Crags. Illust. Lon., 1883, 8vo. (Describes the author's travels in California.) 6. In the Hebrides, Lon., 1883, 8vo. (A reprint of part of No. 1, supra.) 7. In the Himalayas and on the Indian Plains. Illust. Lon., 1884, p. 8vo.

"The present volume is, the author tells us, the Indian portion of her former work, 'From the Hebrides to the Himalayas,' greatly expanded. It has all the attractive qualities which Miss Gordon Cumming has accustomed her readers to look for,—a keen observation, a creditable amount of study of her subject, and a flow of picturesque description, sentiment, and fancy of considerable power and variety, not always under the strictest control."—Ath., No. 2980.

8. Viâ Cornwall to Egypt, Lon., 1885, p. 8vo. 9. Wanderings in China. Illust. Lon. and Edin., 1885, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The picture of China and Chinese life that she is able to lay before her readers is a charming one, and gives a better idea of what the country is like, and a juster estimate of the character of the people, than has yet been laid before the English public."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 859.

"With the wealth of materials placed at his command, and controlled by his own life-long experience, Mr. Curr is able to pass in review the bibliography of Australian ethnology, and in so doing brings a heavy indictment against some of its 'shining lights.' Many notions to which wide currency has been given by such accepted authorities as Brough Smyth, Taplin, Fison, McLellan, and Sir John Lubbock are shown to be absolutely erroneous."—A. H. Keane: Acad., xxxiv. 316.

"Mr. Curr's contention is that the Australian race is the product of a cross in which the negro had a large share, that the family arrived on the continent in this state, and was preserved from change by isolation. . . . He certainly piles up a good deal of evidence to prove the affinity, despite the physical contradiction."—Spectator, lxi. 610.

"The task of the biographer is to examine the judgment his fellow-men have passed upon Mr. Buchanan, and review it in the light of the more complete evidence which he has at his command. This Mr. Curtis professes to have done, and finds that Buchanan has been misjudged. . . . His stand-point he has given us in a long chapter entitled a 'Summary of the Slavery Question.' . . . This is, in substance, what was known in 1860 as the 'Silver Grey' Whig position, and we do not find that Mr. Curtis has since accepted a more comprehensive view of the history of the country."—Nation, xxxvii. 277.

"Within the last ten years the study of Indian ethnology and philology has made rapid strides, and the importance of the investigation of dialectical varieties of speech has in India, as in Europe and elsewhere, been more and more recognized. A mass of materials for the prosecution of these researches—scattered in the Transactions of learned societies, in literary periodicals, and countless Government Reports and other publications—has thus accumulated, which required only the hand of a patient and painstaking linguist to arrange, digest, and present to the student in a handy, lucid, and readable form. This is what Mr. Robert Cust has attempted to accomplish, and has, upon the whole, successfully accomplished, in the book under notice."—Ath., No. 2671.

"This unvarnished but very true account of daily life on a frontier that is now contracting, but has not disappeared, is instructive to those to whom the 'army in peace' is a contradictory, if not a meaningless, phrase. . . . The book is an odd mixture of grave adventure and minute family detail, and its occasional lapses in style, in English, and in syntax, with its sprightly unconventionality, only emphasize the real vigor of much of the original matter."—Nation, xlvi. 455.

Cyples, William, 1831–1882, b. at Longton, Staffordshire, Eng., where his parents were engaged in the famous potteries of the district; became a journalist, edited several provincial papers, and contributed to leading periodicals. In 1877 he left Nottingham, where he had long resided, and went to London, where he published a philosophical work on which he had long been engaged. 1. Pottery Poems, 1859. 2. Satan Restored: a Poem, Lon., 1859, p. 8vo. 3. Philip the Dreamer, Lon., 1866, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 4. An Inquiry into the Process of Human Experience: attempting to set forth its Lower Laws, with some Hints as to the Higher Phenomena of Consciousness, Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"The book shows thorough familiarity with the psychological researches of Professor Bain, G. H. Lewes, Mr. Herbert Spencer, and others, and contains many original and acute remarks upon the topic discussed. Its main purpose, however, is to indicate the defects of these writers in regard to higher philosophy, and to show the necessity of finding fuller satisfaction for the moral and religious aspirations. Unfortunately, it is defaced by the adoption of an elaborate system of new technical phrases."—LESLIE STEPHEN: *Dict. of Nat. Daly, Augustin, b. 1838, at Plymouth, N.C.,; was dramatic critic on several New York papers from 1859 till 1869, when he became a theatrical manager, and organized a company of comedians, which has its headquarters in New York, and has also performed in other cities of the United States, in England, France, and Germany. He has adapted many plays from the German and French. Peg Woffington: a Tribute to the Actress and the Woman. Illustrated by Sixteen Rare Portraits. N. York, 1888, 4to, 150 copies; also a few copies on large paper, fol.

"It is perhaps the most richly adorned volume ever devoted to the memory of a player. . . . Mr. Daly's biography is admirably written, in a style which has a color and flavor of its own, and it is founded on the most careful and loving research."—Nation, xlvi. 392.

"Mr. Daly's life of Woffington is a great improvement upon any previously-attempted memoir of the famous Irish actress. . . . Its fine reproductions of the portraits of Woffington by Hogarth and other painters give it real and, as events will doubtless prove, permanent value. . . . No equally valuable tribute to an English actress of past days has been furnished."—Ath., No. 3173.

Darby, Rev. John Nelson, 1800–1882, b. in London; graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1819; was admitted to the bar in 1825, and afterwards took orders and held a curacy in the Anglican Church, but resigned his charge in 1827 to join a new sect called "the Brethren," afterwards known as the "Plymouth Brethren," from the association of many of their number with Plymouth, where they had a meeting-house. In 1838 he went to Switzerland, and established congregations in the cantons of Vaud, Geneva, and Berne, some of which suffered persecution in 1845 in a revolution aroused by Jesuit intrigues. Darby escaped and returned to Plymouth. He had already been accused of departing from the first principles of "the Brethren," and after his return a division took place, and he founded a new association, known as "the Darbyites." He paid several visits to Canada and to the United States, and also visited New Zealand and the West Indies. His writings were published partly under his own name, partly anonymously or under his initials. He made French and German translations of the New Testament, and wrote a number of hymns. Darwin, Charles Robert, F.R.S., F.G.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1809–1882, b. at "The Mount," Shrewsbury, Eng., son of Robert Waring Darwin, M.D., F.R.S., and of Susanna, daughter of Josiah Wedgwood, and grandson of Erasmus Darwin, (q. v., ante, vol. i.) After studying at Shrewsbury Grammar-School, he entered Edinburgh University in 1825, with a view to adopting his father's profession; but the study of medicine proving distasteful to him, he abandoned it after two years, and entered Christ's College, Cambridge, with the design of fitting himself for the church. The influence of Professor Henslow, whose lectures he attended, aroused an interest in science which soon became dominant, and shortly after taking his B.A. degree, in 1831, he was engaged as naturalist to the "Beagle," then starting under Captain—afterwards Admiral—Fitzroy to complete the survey of Patagonia begun by Captain King in 1826–30, and to make further surveys in South America and the Pacific. In 1836 he returned to England, and was occupied for some time in the preparation of works embodying some of the results of the expedition. In 1839 he married his cousin, Emma Wedgwood, and in 1842 settled at Down, Kent, where he spent the remainder of his life, engaged in researches and experiments designed to test and establish the theory of evolution which has become identified with his name. His study of the South American fossils had first led him to doubt the commonly-received view of the different species of animals and plants as distinct and immutable types, the product of direct and successive acts of creation. But before seeking to displace this doctrine by that of a slow and continuous development through regular and ordinary processes of nature, he desired to trace so far as possible the whole course of derivation, and to illustrate his argument by an abundance of minute details. He accordingly looked forward to the production of a single elaborate work, covering the whole field of his argument. But, finding that he was about to be anticipated by Mr. Alfred Wallace, who had arrived independently at the same general conclusions, he first drew up a paper, which was read, with that of Wallace, at a meeting of the Linnæan Society, July 1, 1858, and then set to work to prepare an "abstract" of his theory, which grew into a volume, and was published in November, 1859. This was The Origin of Species, which excited a discussion that partook of the character of a theological controversy. The adverse criticism was, however, much more sweeping and vehement than the defence. Men of science were not generally prepared to accept the new theory in its entirety, and those most favorably disposed to it either shrunk from the open expression of their approval or were content to claim for it a respectful hearing and to deprecate the notion of its destructive influence on religious belief. Yet there could be little doubt as to the general drift of scientific opinions. In March, 1860, Darwin drew up a classified list of his adherents, including among geologists Lyell and Ramsay, among zoologists Huxley and Lubbock, among botanists Hooker and Asa Gray, (to some extent,) among physiologists Dr. W. B. Carpenter, and (to a large extent) Sir Henry Holland. He added that should the book be forgotten "with such a list, I am convinced the subject will not." Darwin's subsequent works may be regarded as amplifications of different sections of The Origin of Species. The Descent of Man presented the most unpalatable portions of the doctrine, but the shock was less than had been anticipated, the attitude of the public towards evolution having considerably changed in the years between 1859 and 1871. In the interval that has since elapsed the theory of evolution has been subjected to more careful criticism in regard to details, but in the main it has formed the basis of all recent scientific investigation. During his later years Darwin devoted himself chiefly to the study of plants and to works embodying the results of extensive experimental researches. He led a quiet, secluded life, partly on account of chronic ill health, and his absorption in his work was such that he appears to have sacrificed to it not only extraneous interests and occupations, but to some extent his natural tastes, his sense of religion, his love of literature and of art. He was distinguished by his modesty, his simplicity of mind, and his kindness and helpfulness to younger naturalists. He died at Down on April 19, 1882, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. For biog., see DARWIN, FRANCIS, infra; also, ALLEN, C. B. G., and BETTANY, G. T., supra, and a volume of Memorial Notices, by T. H. Huxley, J. G. Romanes, A. Geikie, and W. T. T. Dyer, issued in 1882. The literature of "Darwinism" would form a library in itself, including works in many foreign languages, especially German, the influence of evolution on the general tone of philosophical thought and investigation seeming to have been greater in Germany than in any other country. The following list of Darwin's works, additional to the few mentioned ante, vol. i., does not include his contributions to scientific journals, unless reprinted, which are enumerated in the biography by his son. The critical extracts give, necessarily, only a meagre idea of the controversy that followed the publication of his principal works, the articles from which they are derived being mainly occupied with a discussion of details. 1. A Monograph of the Fossil Balanidæ and Verrucidæ of Great Britain, (Palæontological Soc. Pub.,) Lon., 1854, 4to. 2. publication. The 3d to 6th editions, each with corrections and additions, were published 1861–72, the sale in the latter year having reached 11,000 copies; in 1882 it had extended to 26,000.)

"The essay is full of Mr. Darwin's characteristic excellences. It is a most readable book; full of facts in natural history, old and new, of his collecting and observing; and all of these are told in his own perspicuous language, and all thrown into picturesque combinations, and all sparkle with the colours of fancy and the lights of imagination. It assumes, too, the grave proportions of a sustained argument upon a matter of the deepest interest, not to naturalists alone, or even to men of science exclusively, but to every one who is interested in the history of man and of the relations of nature around him to the history and plan of creation. . . . On what, then, is the new theory based? We say it with unfeigned regret in dealing with such a man as Mr. Darwin, on the merest hypotheses, supported by the most unbounded assumptions."—Quarterly Review, 108, 225 et seq. (This article was by Bishop Wilberforce.)

"Darwin's theory is an ingenious and plausible speculation, to which future physiologists will look back with the kind of admiration we bestow on the atoms of Lucretius or the crystal spheres of Eudoxus, containing, like these, some faint half-truth, marking at once the ignorance of the age and the ability of the philosopher."—North British Review, xlvi. 171.

"It is a book—we say it deliberately—that will not bear to be dealt with lightly. It is the result of long-continued thought and labour, directed by a man of remarkable ability and wide attainments, to construct and consolidate a theory which has for its basis some undeniable facts. There is scarcely an objection that can be urged that Mr. Darwin has not already anticipated, and to which he has not replied, so far as it admits of reply,—and that with a degree of moderation and candour that would be evidences of excellent judgment if they were not, as we believe them to be, entirely unaffected. . . . So much we have said in bare justice to the author of this new theory; but it may relieve the anxiety of some of our readers if we at once declare that, after the most deliberate consideration of his argument, we remain unconvinced."—Sat. Rev., viii. 775.

"Mr. Darwin abhors mere speculation as Nature abhors a vacuum. He is as greedy of cases and precedents as any constitutional lawyer, and all the principles he lays down are capable of being brought to the test of observation and experiment. The path he bids us follow professes to be not a mere airy track, fabricated of ideal cobwebs, but a solid and broad bridge of facts. If it be so, it will carry us safely over many a chasm in our knowledge, and lead us to a region free from the snares of those fascinating but barren virgins, the Final Causes, against whom a high authority has so justly warned us."—T. H HUXLEY: article in the Times of December 26, 1859, quoted in the Life of Darwin. Amer. ed., ii. 49.

"We are disposed to rank the derivative hypothesis in its fulness with the nebular hypothesis, and to regard both as allowable, as not unlikely to prove tenable in spite of some strong objections, but as not therefore demonstrably true. Those, if any there be, who regard the derivative hypothesis as satisfactorily proved, must have loose notions as to what proof is. Those who imagine it can be easily refuted and cast aside must, we think, have very imperfect or very prejudiced conceptions of the facts concerned and of the questions at issue."—ASA GRAY: Darwiniana, 135. (The article from which the extract is taken is one of three originally published in the Atlantic Monthly for July, August, and October, 1860, and reprinted, at Darwin's request, in London, in 1861.)

3. On the Various Contrivances by which British and Foreign Orchids are fertilized by Insects, and on the Good Effects of Intercrossing, Lon., 1862, 8vo; 2d ed., (in which the word "On" is omitted from the title,) 1877.

"The mass of detail here accumulated round a single subject strikingly illustrates the inexhaustible nature of biological research, and the laborious patience with which Mr. Darwin lays his foundations. The net result is that some six thousand species of Orchids are absolutely dependent upon the agency of insects for their fertilization. That is to say, were these plants unvisited by insects, they would all rapidly disappear. . . . Mr. Darwin adds a valuable chapter on the Homologies of Orchids."—Sat. Rev., xiv. 486.

4. The Movements and Habits of Climbing Plants, (reprinted from the Journal of the Linnæan Society, vol. ix.,) Lon., 1865, 8vo; 2d ed, rev., 1875.

"Readers of this fascinating treatise will learn, first of all, that the sun has no influence over such movements directly, and that its indirect influence is commonly adverse or disturbing, except the heat, which quickens vegetable as it does animal life. Also, that climbing is accomplished by powers and actions as unlike those generally predicated of the vegetable kingdom as any which have been brought to view in the preceding volume," ["Insectivorous Plants."]—ASA GRAY: Darwiniana, 336, (reprinted from the Nation, January 13, 1876.)

5. The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. Illust. Lon., 1868, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., rev., 1875, 1 vol.

"Mr. Darwin's recent volumes are not of a nature to startle either friends or foes of the peculiar philosophical theory which has of late years been associated with his name. . . . They are remarkable for the profusion and variety of facts which the writer has gathered together, and the skill with which he has brought them to bear upon his fundamental hypothesis. . . . Those who shrink with the most suspicion or dread from the author's abstract scheme of the primary origin of living species may find satisfaction and profit in the stores of information with which these pages abound concerning forms of life as they exist."—Sat. Rev., xxv. 358.

6. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illust. Lon., 1871, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1874, 1 vol.; new ed., 17th thousand, 1883.

"Never, perhaps, in the history of philosophy, have such wide generalizations been derived from such a small basis of fact. Mr. Darwin's theory of the growth of the moral sense and of the intellectual faculty is unsupported by any proof; and the very corner-stone of the hypothesis, that the human mind is identical in kind with that of the brutes, is a mere assumption, opposed alike to experience and philosophy."—Edin. Rev., cxxxiv. 99.

"The effect of Mr. Darwin's long-expected and lately-published volumes will not be so much to startle friend or foe by novel facts or transcendent theories as to consolidate, to fortify, and to push to a conclusion the scheme of ideas which the world has learned for years to associate with his name. . . . His conclusions now go the length which he had, in terms somewhat vague and tentative, set himself at the outset of his speculations. He claims to have brought man himself, his origin and constitution, within that unity which he had previously sought to trace through all lower animal forms. The growth of opinion in the interval, due in chief measure to his own intermediate works, has placed the discussion of this problem very much in advance of that held by it fifteen years ago. . . . Mr. Darwin's object in the present work is to establish, from a general survey of his whole nature, the evidences of 'man, like every other species, being descended from some pre-existing form; secondly, the manner of his development; and, thirdly, the value of the differences between the so-called races of man.' . . . The intellectual pleasure of following so exquisite a chain of philosophical deduction may almost compensate many minds for the shock which his ultimate conclusion will inflict on them."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 276.

7. The Expression of the Emotions in Man and Animals: with Photographic and other Illustrations, Lon., 1872, p. 8vo. (More than 5000 copies were sold on the day of publication; but so large a reprint was issued that a revised edition, for which materials had been collected, was never called for.)

"His leading idea is that of tracing the law of Evolution as displayed in, or accounting for, Expression or the play of features and gestures in man and animals,—the inarticulate language, as it has been called, of the emotions. . . . As a kind of supplement or parergon to his more profound or systematic studies, as well as containing inexhaustible matter of novel suggestion and curious thought, this little work will be found well worthy of the writer's name."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 633.

8. Insectivorous Plants, Lon., 1875, 8vo.

"Before the experiments made by Mr. Darwin, no such power as that of true digestion was known to exist in the vegetable kingdom."—Sat. Rev., xl. 304.

"Mr. Darwin's book may be held up as a model of what a treatise should be that is addressed to intelligent readers, a majority of whom, it is to be presumed, have no special acquaintance with the matter under consideration. . . . Fact is added to fact, inference to inference, till at length the body of evidence, direct and indirect, becomes so overwhelming that there is as little chance of controverting Mr. Darwin's conclusions as there is for a fly to escape when once it has been caught in the cruel embrace of a sundew."—Ath., No. 2490.

9. The Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1878.

10. The Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the Same Species, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1880.

"This book of Mr. Darwin's is a specimen of what, at first sight, may seem one of the most insignificant as well as the dryest of scientific investigations; but it is another instance of that marvellous power of laborious observation and experiment for which its author is so remarkable, and which evolves from the most obscure corners of creation what may yet prove to be great results."—Spectator, li. 183.

"He has brought together, with his wonted industry and patience, an immense array of facts; . . . and he may be held to have satisfactorily established the preliminary truth that differently-formed flowers are actually produced upon plants of the same stock. But he has hardly shown his habitual grasp of the problem in its bearing upon the general law of evolution, or upon that specific law of beneficent arrangement which he has taught us to read in nature."—Sat. Rev., xliv. 241.

11. The Power of Movement in Plants. Illust. 1880, p. 8vo; new ed., 1881.

"Mr. Darwin has in the quietude of his hot-house, and with a boundless variety of forms for selection, experimented upon the vital organism of plants, seconded by the untiring energy of his son. Night and day seem to have come alike to the aid of this enthusiastic pair of naturalists. The electric light has served them on the failure of the sun's beams, and has, in truth, opened up of itself a wholly new field for observation as regards the agency of light upon the phenomena of life."—Sat. Rev., li. 57.

12. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Worms: with Observations on their Habits, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo; 6th thousand, corrected, 1882.

"With the absolute simplicity and frankness which constitute the chief literary merit of his books, he recounts the observations, scattered now over fifty years, which he has made upon the habits of earthworms, the amount of fine earth brought up by worms to the surface, the part which worms have played in the burial of ancient buildings, and the action of worms in the denudation of the land."—Ath., No., 2816.

General Criticism:

"In respect of the great problems of Philosophy, the post-Darwinian generation is, in one sense, exactly where the præ-Darwinian generations were. They remain insoluble. But the present generation has the advantage of being better provided with the means of freeing itself from the tyranny of certain sham solutions. The known is finite, the unknown infinite; intellectually we stand on an islet in the midst of an illimitable ocean of inexplicability. Our business in every generation is to reclaim a little more land, to add something to the extent and solidity of our possessions. And even a cursory glance at the history of the biological sciences during the last quarter of a century is sufficient to justify the assertion that the most potent instrument for the extension of the realm of natural knowledge which has come into men's hands, since the publication of Newton's 'Principia,' is Darwin's 'Origin of Species.'"—T. H. Huxley: On the Reception of the "Origin of Species," forming chap. xiv. of the Life of Darwin.

"The few general facts out of which the theory of evolution by natural selection is formed—viz., struggle for existence, survival of the fittest, and heredity—were all previously well-known facts; and we may not unreasonably feel astonished that so apparently obvious a combination of them as that which occurred to Mr. Darwin should have occurred to no one else, with the single exception of Mr. Wallace. . . . But the greatness of Mr. Darwin as the reformer of biology is not to be estimated by the fact that he conceived the idea of natural selection: his claim to everlasting memory rests upon the many years of devoted labour whereby he tested this idea in all conceivable ways, —amassing facts from every department of science, balancing evidence with the soundest judgment, shirking no difficulty, and at last astonishing the world as with a revelation by publishing the completed proof of evolution." —Nature, xxvi. 99.

"Those who have watched the progress of science within the last ten years will bear me out to the full when I assert that there is no field of biological inquiry in which the influence of the 'Origin of Species' is not traceable; the foremost men of science are either avowed champions of its leading doctrines, or at any rate abstain from opposing them; a host of young and ardent investigators seek for and find inspiration and guidance in Mr. Darwin's great work; and the general doctrine of Evolution, to one side of which it gives expression, finds in the phenomena of biology a firm base of operations whence it may conduct its conquest of the whole realm of nature. History warns us, however, that it is the customary fate of new truths to begin as heresies and to end as superstitions; and, as matters now stand, it is hardly rash to anticipate that in another twenty years the new generation, educated under the influences of the present day, will be in danger of accepting the main doctrines of the 'Origin of Species' with as little reflection, and, it may be, with as little justification, as so many of our contemporaries, twenty years ago, rejected them."—T. H. Huxley: Nature, xxii. 1.

"Darwinian teleology has the special advantage of accounting for the imperfections and failures as well as for successes. It not only accounts for them, but turns them to practical account. It explains the seeming waste as being part and parcel of a great economical process. Without the competing multitude, no struggle for life; and without this, no natural selection and survival of the fittest, no continuous adaptation to changing surroundings, no diversification and improvement, leading from lower up to higher and nobler forms. So the most puzzling things of all to the old-school teleologists are the principia of the Darwinian."—Asa Gray: Darwiniana, 378.

"Mr. Darwin's investigation presents us with a creative force, constantly, and apparently to human eyes tentatively, producing all possible variations in the specific living forms of every kind which it has brought into existence, with a view, as it were, to see whether any of them will have the advantage over others,—creating very high forms of intellectual instinct at the very threshold of the world of life,—gradually mingling the love of beauty with the instinct of self-preservation, and fashioning out of that love of beauty some of the most wonderful of the artistic instincts of the world,—rooting, however, all its greatest achievements, both intellectual and moral, in the sense of weakness, and overcoming this sense of weakness only by the most wonderful and noble of all the forms of the universe, disinterested affection,—finally, when this moral affection is once fairly generated, gradually depriving the higher beings of the instincts by which the lower had been preserved, and giving them in the place thereof the power to create and mould their own instincts, and even to spoil and grievously sin against such instincts as were left them, if they would,—in other words, giving them love, freedom, conscience, the power to sin. Is this in any sense whatever, even conceivably, an atheistic philosophy? . . . For our own part, we find Mr. Darwin's investigation of the origin of man a far more wonderful vindication of Theism than Paley's 'Natural Theology.'"—Spectator, xliv. 319.
